

GETTING TO KNOW AS/NZS 5601

Gasfitters need to become familiar with new gas installation Standard AS/NZS 5601:2010. Dr Eric Palmer explains how it came about and what it contains.

For many years, NZS 5261 has been the gasfitter's bible for installation of gas pipework and equipment and gas appliances in buildings. There has been a companion Standard, NZS 5428, for installations in caravans and boats.

The more recent editions have clearly identified mandatory performance requirements and non-mandatory (but recommended) means of compliance that satisfy these requirements, and so the gas regulations.

When the Gas (Safety and Measurement) Regulations 2010 were amended in November 2011, regulations referencing NZS 5261 and NZS 5428 were replaced by regulations calling up AS/NZS 5601:1 and AS/NZS 5601:2.

In NZ, NZS 5261 remains as an alternative expression of the performance requirements for imported installations until 31 December 2012. As legislative change has not yet been introduced in some Australian states, gasfitters there will still be working to AS 5601:2004.

“GASFITTERS IN NZ AND AUSTRALIA WILL BE WORKING TO THE SAME STANDARDS”

Why change?

The change has been introduced so gasfitters in NZ and Australia will be working to the same Standards. Under the Trans-Tasman Mutual Recognition Agreement, gasfitters' licences issued in one country have been accepted in the other, despite differences in legislation.

Until AS/NZS 5601:2010 was published, the Standard used by gasfitters in Australia did not identify the essential safety and performance requirements to be met by gas installations.

AS 5601:2004 was simply a mandatory means of compliance installations had to conform to unless otherwise approved by a state's technical regulator – but the regulator had no criteria against which to issue approvals. Therefore practices differed from state to state, and probably among different approvers in the same state.

To address this, the (Australia and NZ) Gas Technical Regulators Committee asked the joint gas installations Standards committee to develop a new version of AS 5601 based on the NZ Standards. Now, with common Standards, gasfitting will be done to the same performance requirements in both countries.

What's in the Standard?

AS 5601 covered all installations, irrespective of size and location, and included caravans and boats. In contrast, NZ has separate Standards for installations in buildings (NZS 5261) and those in caravans and boats (NZS 5428).

NZS 5261 had 3 parts in the same document. Part 1 contained performance requirements, Part 2 was a means of compliance for small installations, and Part 3 gave references for use as means of compliance for larger installations.

The new Standard adopts a mixed approach. It is in two separate documents (parts 1 and 2) based on NZS 5261 and NZS 5428. Part 1 is general installations, principally in buildings, and Part 2 is for LPG installations used for non-propulsive purposes in caravans and boats.

Both Parts have a similar structure. Section 1 – scope and general – sets out the aspects of gasfitting to which the Standard applies, explains the application of performance requirements and means of compliance and gives the interpretation of defined terms for both documents.

The Standard references a number of Australian Standards that must be used in Australia as part of the means of compliance, but this does not apply in NZ. Materials and fittings used here must all be fit for purpose, but need not conform to the Australian Standard and need not be certified. Any alternative Standard may be used.

Note also that the NZ Gas (Safety and Measurement) Regulations 2010 list any limits related to gas supply pressure that may be stated in the AS/NZS 5601 (200 kPa in Part 1 and 3 kPa in Part 2). Those limits are embedded in Australian legislation, so had to be reflected in the Standard.

The performance requirements set out in Section 2 of Part 1 are virtually identical to those in Part 1 of NZS 5261. NZS 5428 never had explicit performance requirements, relying on
