

The Acts of Compassion and the Motives Behind Them in On Compassion, an Essay by Barbara Lazear Ascher

“On Compassion”

“On Compassion” is an essay written by Barbara Lazear Ascher. The main argument of Ascher’s piece deals with acts of compassion, as well as the motives behind them. Ascher utilizes a somber tone, being a third party observer. She elaborates on different times she has witnessed various moments where someone is confronted with a possible, yet unlikely threat and reciprocated the threat with an act of kindness in order to question the true motives between these polite deeds- fear or compassion.

The first example Ascher states was a time when she witnessed an interaction between a woman with her child, and a homeless man in New York City. Ascher develops the story with the use of pathos, or emotional appeal to relay the scene of a the encounter. She writes; “The baby’s mother waits for the light to change and her hands close tighter on the stroller’s handle as she sees the man approach.” This wrenches at hearts, as the reader begins to feel sympathy for the homeless man; before this, the man was only walking the streets, pondering to himself. He stopped to admire the woman’s child. In a hasty effort, the woman offers the man a dollar in hopes he would leave; “...and passes a folded dollar over her child’s head to the man who stands and stares even though the light has changed...” For additional effect, Ascher mentions 5 bystanders that ignore the obvious and awkward tension, leaving the woman to fend for herself. The reader is then provoked into feeling pity for the homeless man, as shown by the woman’s actions.
