

C++ Reference

The purpose of this handout is to provide a summary and reference of the concepts covered in lecture as well as common constructs used in C++. It will also contain quick reference comparisons between the Stanford and standard libraries. At the end of each section is a set of exercises that you could try out to practice the relevant concepts at a less intimidating level than the assignments. I will happy look at your implementations of these and provide style feedback if you email your code to me. Eventually, when time allows, I hope to have some involved examples in each section.

Disclaimer: The stylistic choices and recommendations are, at times, opinions and not necessarily the absolute optimal way to deal with the problem at hand. Over time, you will develop your own style of programming so take these to be a good starting point to branch off from.
