

MOLLUSKS, ARTHROPODS & ECHINODERMS

ENGAGE

Have you ever walked along the beach and looked at all the different types of shells? Shells are actually exoskeletons of mollusks, one of the classifications of invertebrates.

EXPLORE

Scientists believe that more than 97% of all species on Earth are invertebrates. This massive number of species have been classified into several phyla according to their characteristics and traits. Three of these phyla are Mollusca, Arthropoda, and Echinodermata.

EXPLANATION

There are eight primary classifications for the millions of invertebrate species that live on Earth today. Three of these classifications are Mollusca, Arthropoda, and Echinodermata. We're going to look at some of the specific characteristics of the animals in each of these categories.

Invertebrates in the Mollusca classification are soft-bodied mollusks with bilateral symmetry and typically one or two shells. Their organs are in a fluid-filled body cavity. Although most mollusks live in water, some live on land. There are more than 110,000 known species of mollusks, including snails, squids, and clams. The body plan of mollusks includes a thin layer of tissue called a mantle, which covers the body organs. For many mollusks, the mantle secretes a shell or exoskeleton. The area between the soft body and the mantle is the mantle cavity, which contains the gills that mollusks use to breathe underwater.

The great stag beetle is an arthropod.
