

GENERAL PAPER

Paper 8009/01
Paper 1

Key Messages

Content

- Take time to fully understand a question before choosing it
- Address the question and focus closely on its keywords
- Cover every aspect of the question
- Analyse and evaluate instead of cataloguing
- Develop each point with examples or illustrations
- Introductions should be to the point
- Conclusions should not simply re-work the question

Use of English

- Check carefully for errors in grammar and expression
- Use vocabulary precisely and appropriately in context
- Correct punctuation and paragraphing are essential for well-structured discussions

General Comments

Content

Successful candidates chose questions where they understood all of the keywords. While it is tempting for candidates to select questions based on the extent of their topical knowledge, this often resulted in descriptive responses that lack sustained focus on the question.

There was a general tendency for introductions to make little or no reference to the keywords of the question but rather to make vague assertions about aspects of the modern world. Stronger introductions demonstrated the candidates' understanding of the keywords and gave an idea where their viewpoint may lie, before discussing the issue in more detail in the following paragraphs.

It is important that a range of ideas be raised and each point explained and linked to the question. It is essential to offer specific examples and these should come from a variety of local, regional and international sources where appropriate. Too many candidates simply listed points relying on description rather than analysis and evaluation. Often, knowledge was shown but explanations were vague or lacked sufficient development. Weaker responses depended too much on generalisations or assertions.

Many candidates strived to offer balanced arguments and this is a good approach if there is a clear sense of a final standpoint. It is less effective to divide a response into pros and cons which cancel one another out.

A notable number of candidates began essays only to abandon them halfway through in favour of another question. This wastes time and candidates should read all the questions carefully before selecting one question, drawing up a plan and staying with it.
