Starting cold engine

Temperatures above 32° F (0° C) -

Do not depress accelerator while starting

Temperatures below 32° F (0° C) -

Depress accelerator fully while starting

- No matter what the outside temperature is, pull out knob for cold start device (on left of steering column).
- Turn key to PRE-GLOW (Pos. 2). Glow plug light should be on.
- As soon as glow plug light goes out, turn key to start engine.
- Approximately 2 minutes after starting, fully push in knob for cold start device.

Do not accelerate engine excessively immediately after starting before oil pressure can build up.

Do not operate starter longer than 30 seconds. If engine does not start, wait about 30 seconds, then pre-glow again and start. If engine fires but runs rough, continue to engage starter a few seconds longer until engine runs smoothly.

Starting warm engine

Do not depress accelerator while starting.

- No matter what the outside temperature is, turn key all the way to right to start engine. DO NOT PRE-GLOW.

Stopping engine

- Turn key back to OFF position. Fuel supply is cut off at this moment, engine will stop.
- Do not stop engine immediately after hard or extended driving. Keep engine running at increased idle for about two minutes to prevent excessive heat build-up before turning off engine.

Never leave engine idling unattended. If warning lights should come on to indicate improper operation, they would go unheeded. This could result in overheating or other damage to the car.

Fuel: Diesel Fuel No. 2

Not all gas stations offer Diesel fuel. Stations offering Diesel fuel are generally located at truck routes along the major North American highways. Before you travel to remote, isolated areas, be sure to check in advance whether Diesel fuel is available.

Truck operators guides or directories of Diesel fuel stations are generally sold at Diesel fuel stations. One such Diesel fuel guide for North America, which we know of, is published by Diesel Fuel Services, Inc., P.O. Box 256, South Salem, New York 10590.

Some U.S. states and Canadian Provinces require that owners of diesel-powered cars obtain special permits and comply with other requirements when purchasing fuel. Ask your VW dealer or inquire at any Diesel fuel station whether such requirements exist in your area.
