Conflict and Cooperation in Microbial Societies Ana E. Escalante,Michael Travisano,2017-04-13 The most evident aspect of biodiversity is the variety of complex forms and behaviors among organisms both living and extinct Comparative molecular and physiological studies show that the evolution of complex phenotypic traits involves multiple levels of biological organization i e genes chromosomes organelles cells individual organisms species etc Regardless of the specific molecular mechanisms and details the evolution of different complex biological organizations share a commonality cooperation and conflict among the parts of the biological unit under study The potential for conflict among parts is abundant How then do complex systems persist given the necessity of cooperative behavior for their maintenance when the potential for conflict occurs across all levels of biological organization In this Research Topic and eBook we present ideas and work on the question how coexistence of biological components at different levels of organization persists in the face of antagonistic conflicting or even exploitative behavior of the parts The goal of this topic is in presenting examples of cooperation and conflict at different levels of biological organization to discuss the consequences that this tension have had in the diversification and emergence of novel phenotypic traits Exemplary cases are studies investigating the evolution of genomes formation of colonial aggregates of cells biofilms the origin and maintenance of multicellular organisms and the stable coexistence of multispecies consortia producing a cooperative product Altogether we hope that the contributions to this Research Topic build towards mechanistic knowledge of the biological phenomenon of coexistence in the face of conflict We believe that knowledge on the mechanisms of the origin and evolutionary maintenance of cooperation has implications beyond evolutionary biology such as novel approaches in controlling microbial infections in medicine and the modes by studies in synthetic biology are conducted when designing economically important microbial consortia Managing Biotechnology Françoise Simon,Glen Giovannetti,2017-10-16 A comprehensive overview of the new business context for biopharma companies featuring numerous case studies and state of the art marketing models Biotechnology has developed into a key innovation driver especially in the field of human healthcare But as the biopharma industry continues to grow and

Behavioral Finance: The Second

Generation Meir Statman,2019-12-02 Behavioral finance presented in this book is the second generation of behavioral finance The first generation starting in the early 1980s largely accepted standard finance's notion of people's wants as rational wants restricted to the utilitarian benefits of high returns and low risk That first generation commonly described people as irrational succumbing to cognitive and emotional errors and misled on their way to their rational wants The second generation describes people as normal It begins by acknowledging the full range of people's normal wants and their benefits utilitarian expressive and emotional distinguishes normal wants from errors and offers guidance on using shortcuts and avoiding errors on the way to satisfying normal wants People's normal wants include financial security nurturing children and families gaining high social status and staying true to values People's normal wants even more than their cognitive and emotional shortcuts and errors underlie answers to important questions of finance including saving and spending portfolio construction asset pricing and market efficiency

Studying Tree Responses to Extreme Events Achim Bräuning, Andreas Bolte, Cristina Nabais, Sergio Rossi, Ute Sass-Klaassen, 2017-06-05 Trees are among the longest living organisms They are sensitive to extreme climatic events and document the effects of environmental changes in form of structural modifications of their tissues These modifications represent an integrated signal of complex biological responses enforced by the environment For example temporal change in stem increment integrates multiple information of tree performance and wood anatomical traits may be altered by climatic extremes or environmental stress Recent developments in preparative tools and computational image analysis enable to quantify changes in wood anatomical features like vessel density or vessel size Thus impacts on their functioning can be related to climatic forcing factors Similarly new developments in monitoring cambial phenology and mechanistic modelling are enlightening the interrelationships between environmental factors wood formation and tree performance and mortality Quantitative wood anatomy is a reliable indicator of drought occurrence during the growing season and therefore has been studied intensively in recent years The variability in wood anatomy not only alters the biological and hydraulic functioning of a tree but may also influence the technological properties of wood with substantial impacts in forestry On a larger scale alterations of sapwood and phloem area and their ratios to other functional traits provide measures to detect changes in a tree's life functions and increasing risk of drought induced mortality with possible impacts on hydrological processes and species composition of plant communities Genetic variability within and across populations is assumed to be crucial for species survival in an unpredictable future world The magnitude of genetic variation and heritability of adaptive traits might define the ability to adapt to climate change Is there a relation between genetic variability and resilience to climate change Is it possible to link genetic expression and climate change to obtain deeper knowledge of functional genetics To derive precise estimates of genetic determinism it is important to define adaptive traits in wood properties and on a whole tree scale Understanding the mechanisms ruling these processes is fundamental to assess the impact of extreme climate events on forest ecosystems and to provide realistic scenarios of tree responses to changing climates Wood is also a major carbon sink with a long term residence impacting the global carbon cycle How well do we understand the link between wood growth dynamics wood carbon allocation and the global carbon cycle Papers contribution to this Research Topic will cover a wide range of ecosystems However special relevance will be given to Mediterranean type areas These involve coastal regions of four continents making Mediterranean type ecosystems extremely interesting for investigating the potential impacts of global change on growth and for studying responses of woody plants under extreme environmental conditions For example the ongoing trend towards warmer temperatures and reduced precipitation can increase the susceptibility to fire and pests The EU funded COST Action STREeSS Studying Tree Responses to extreme Events a SynthesiS addresses such crucial tree biological and forest ecological issues by providing a collection of important methodological and scientific insights about the current state of knowledge and by opinions for future research needs
