

THE REAPING

THE HUNGER GAMES SEASON ALWAYS BEGINS WITH THE REAPINGS.

On the reaping day, citizens in all the districts across Panem gather in their town squares. In each district, two names are selected from two large glass globes — the names of the new male and female tributes, to front of the Hall of Justice and the seal of Panem, the people of the districts wait to hear who will represent them in the Games.

All citizens in all twelve districts from the ages of twelve to eighteen are entered into the selection pool for the Hunger Games. At age twelve, your name is entered once. At thirteen, twice. By the age of eighteen, the final year of eligibility, your name goes into the pool seven times.

A citizen can also choose to receive a tessera — a year's supply of grain and oil — in return for adding his or her name an additional time to the pool. One can choose to do this for family members, too. Many people take the gamble, opting for the extra ration and facing the increased risk.

Upon arrival, each citizen of eligible age must register with a worker from the Capitol. The worker wears rubber gloves in order to perform the pit safety. One by one, this worker takes each citizen's finger, quickly pricks it, and feeds the blood into a ledger. Then a small scanner is passed over the blood, registering the person's information. "EVERDEEN, KATNISS, 16mm."

EVERDEEN, FRANKIE, 12mm "This way the Capitol can keep track of who is newly eligible, who has taken tesserae, and who has grown too old for the Games."

In District 12, the reaping takes place in the town square, where a temporary stage holds a microphone and chairs for town officials and the district's only long ruler. The town square is a good meeting place for most of the year, but on reaping day it can be a bit crowded and noisy. The citizens of the districts are all seated out in their town squares for the reaping. They're eager, but also silent and respectful as the ceremony is about to begin. The leader, through eighteen-year-olds seated in a cardboard box, greets the age with the district in the front. Adults must stay far back the more, as they are there purely as spectators.
