

Selection and Speciation How can changes in a population result in the formation of a new species?

Why? Have you ever wondered how the great diversity of life on Earth's land exists (about 10 million different types) after only 100 million years? Environmental pressures may cause populations to change over time via natural selection. This is because any organism that is better suited to its current environment will produce the most offspring and pass on its genes. But organisms will also pass down traits even without creating a new species. So what could the mechanisms of biological diversity come from or represent?
