Abstract

The chance of getting colorectal cancer (CRC) is higher in people with chronic ulcerative colitis (UC). The impact of parasitic infections on UC is underappreciated. The purpose of this study was to look into the effect of intestinal protozoal infections on the dysplastic changes generated by UC. The research included 152 adult patients with histologically confirmed UC and 152 healthy controls. Fecal samples were examined for the presence of parasites and fecal calprotectin (FC). The enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay measured serum anti-p53 antibodies (p53Abs) and metallothioneins (MTs). The advanced oxidation protein products (AOPPs) and reduced glutathione (GSH) levels were measured by a spectrophotometric method in all subjects. Serum C-reactive protein (CRP) and IL-6 were also measured. In addition, histopathological and immunohistochemical investigations of intestinal tissue were done. Our results exhibited significant increases in FC and CRP, IL-6, AOPPs, MTs, and p53Abs in ulcerative colitis patients with parasitic infections compared to those without parasites. In contrast, GSH levels showed a significant decrease in the same group compared with other groups. Histopathological and immunohistochemical assessments of intestinal tissue signified severe inflammation and strong expression of PD-L1 in patients with parasitic infections compared to others without parasitic infections. Our research indicated a greater frequency of intestinal protozoa in UC patients with elevated inflammatory and dysplastic biomarker levels. This suggests that these parasites may be involved in the etiology of chronic UC and the associated carcinogenetic process. This is the first report of a link between parasitic infections and dysplastic alterations in UC patients.

Introduction

Ulcerative colitis is a type of chronic inflammatory bowel disease (IBD) causing superficial damage to the mucosal layer of the colon and rectum (Ungaro et al. 2017). Chronic diarrhea and fecal blood are these patients' most common clinical features. UC patients are expected to have a 2.4-fold greater CRC risk than the general population (Jess et al. 2012). Early onset IBD appears to be associated with an increased risk of CRC (Olén et al. 2020). In addition to CRP and FC, serum sIL-2R and IL-6 levels can be used to determine disease activity status in UC patients (Mavropoulou et al. 2020). Inhibition of inflammation has therapeutic benefits as it affects the steps of tumor development, including initiation, promotion, invasion, and metastasis (Romano et al. 2016). Biscaglia et al. (2021) reported that 25 IBD-CRC patients had their 39 genes implicated in cancer predisposition.
