Florida's Natural Resources

Natural Resources: Energy Use

Natural resources are all around us. Natural resources are materials or substances that occur without the actions of humans. These resources are essential for survival or they can be used for economic gain. In addition, it takes hundreds to thousands of years to form. Many of these resources are used up before new ones can reform, so we classify them as nonrenewable. Examples of nonrenewable resources are fossil fuels, phosphate and oil. Some natural resources we use are considered renewable, meaning we can get them back. Examples of renewable resources are wind and energy from the Sun. There are many ways to classify or study natural resources. These resources that provide us with energy.

Fossil Fuel

Using cars for transportation is a convenient and quick way to travel to school or work. Most cars rely on gasoline to power them. This gas is produced from fossil fuels. Fossil fuels are a type of nonrenewable resource.

There are many types of fossil fuels. Some are made from the remains of plants and animals that lived millions of years ago. Some are made from the remains of plants and animals that lived thousands of years ago. The burning of fossil fuels causes a lot of harm to our environment. The negative impacts of fossil fuels would include increased global warming, greenhouse gases, ocean acidification, water pollution and destruction of natural resources.
