

The Digestive System

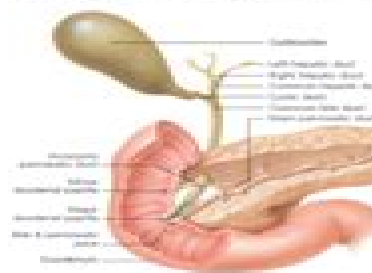

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food is broken down mechanically in the mouth or physically through a series of chemical reactions and absorption processes, allowing nutrients to be absorbed. The digestive system also removes indigestible components that must be excreted as the waste of the gastrointestinal tract.

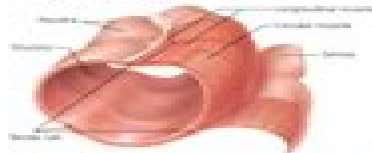

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, digested material enters the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, which is connected to the pancreas by the pancreatic duct. This duct is a branching system on the pancreas where the pancreatic juice secreted by the pancreas enters the duodenum. The gallbladder stores bile secreted by the liver and releases it into the duodenum.

Layers of large intestine

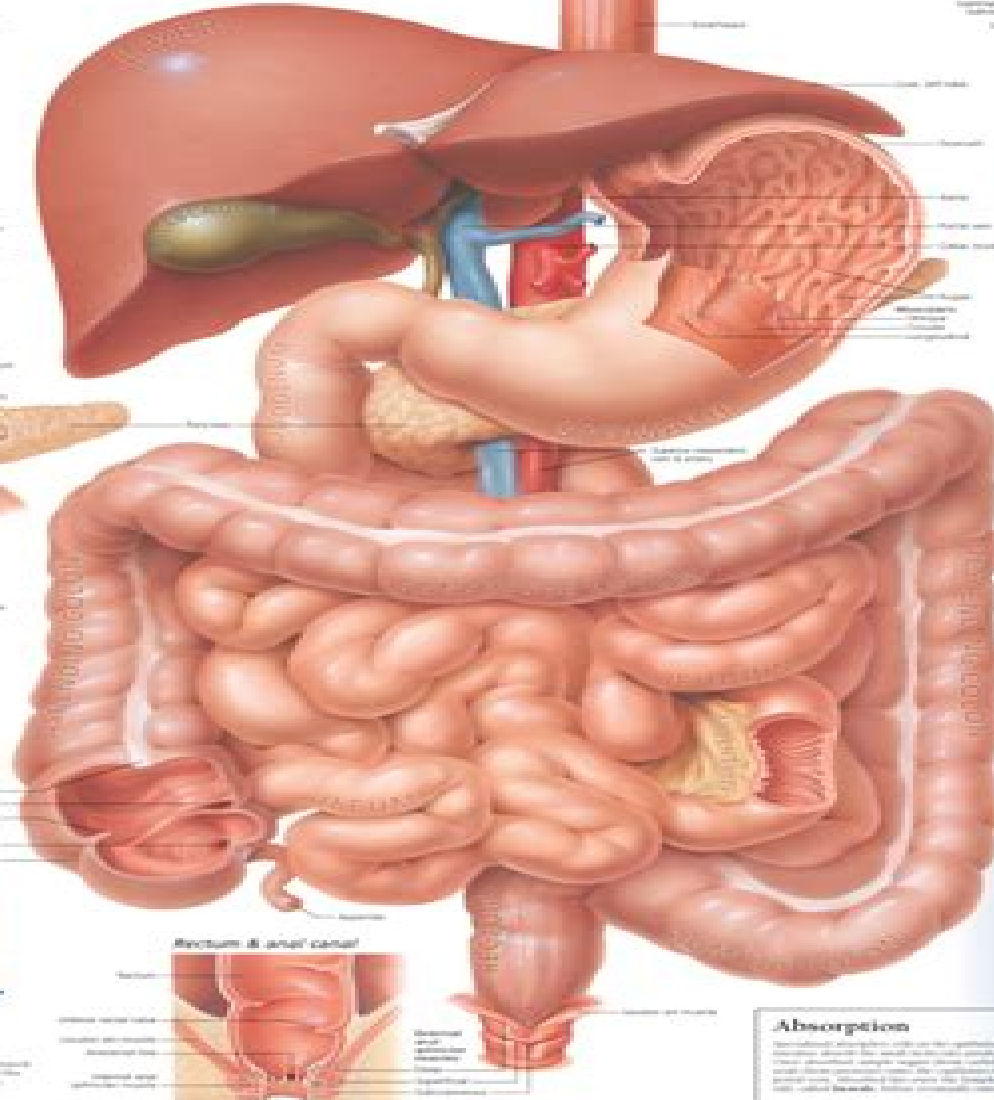

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the caecum, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, the sigmoid colon, and the rectum. The large intestine is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the undigested food and forming feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions move the material forward and the food is broken down and absorbed.

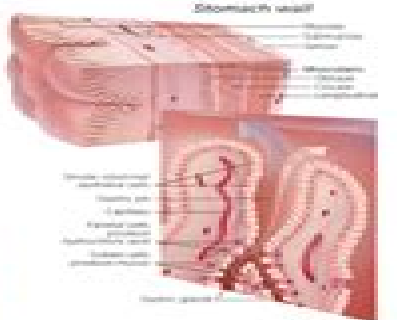

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing the food breaks it into smaller pieces, making it easier to swallow. Saliva, secreted by the salivary glands, moistens the food and helps in the digestion of carbohydrates. Saliva also contains the enzyme amylase, which begins the chemical digestion of starches. Saliva also contains lysozyme, which has antibacterial properties.

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for the digestion of food. It is located in the upper left part of the abdomen. The stomach has a thick, muscular wall that contracts to mix food with gastric juices, forming a semi-solid mass called chyme.

Small intestine

The small intestine is a long, coiled tube that is responsible for the digestion of food. It is located in the central part of the abdomen. The small intestine has a highly folded inner lining called villi, which increase the surface area for absorption.

Absorption

The nutrients from the food are absorbed into the bloodstream through the walls of the small intestine. The absorbed nutrients are then transported to the liver, where they are processed and stored. The remaining material is then moved to the large intestine for excretion.
