

The Digestive System

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, large intestine, and rectum to be eliminated from the body. The digestive system also includes accessory organs such as the salivary glands, liver, and pancreas.

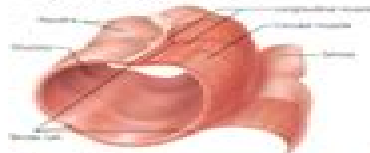

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, chyme moves into the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, where it is mixed with bile secreted by the liver and pancreatic juice secreted by the pancreas. This area is a mixing region on the intestine where the accessory organs are working together. Bile from the gallbladder (which stores bile) is secreted into the duodenum.

Layers of large intestine

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the colon (ascending, transverse, descending, and sigmoid), and the rectum. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the remaining indigestible food matter, thereby forming feces. The large intestine also houses a large number of beneficial bacteria that aid in the digestion of food.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions move the material forward and the food is then, when the stomach has relaxed.

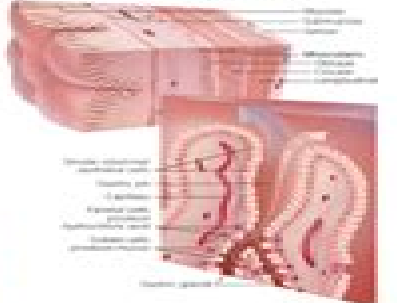

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing, the mechanical action of the food, is called mastication. Saliva, secreted by the salivary glands, moistens the food and helps in the breakdown of the food into smaller particles. Saliva also contains the enzyme amylase, which begins the chemical digestion of carbohydrates.

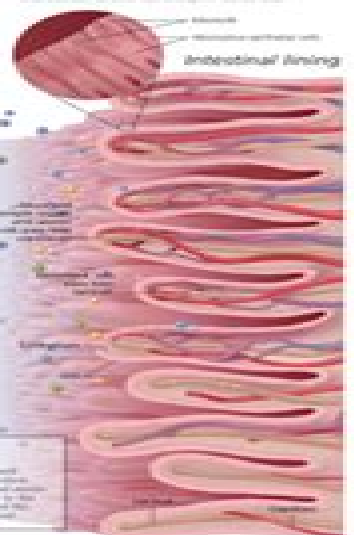

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for the mechanical and chemical digestion of food. It is located in the upper left part of the abdominal cavity. The stomach wall is composed of several layers, including the mucosa, submucosa, muscle, and serosa.

Small intestine

The small intestine consists of three parts: the duodenum, jejunum, and ileum. It is responsible for the chemical digestion of food and the absorption of nutrients. The small intestine is highly coiled and has a large surface area for absorption.

Absorption

The small intestine is the primary site for the absorption of nutrients. The villi on the inner lining of the small intestine increase the surface area for absorption. Nutrients are absorbed into the bloodstream and the lymphatic system.
