

The human skeleton is composed of 206 bones, which are divided into the axial skeleton (skull, spine, and rib cage) and the appendicular skeleton (arms and legs). The bones are made of a hard, mineralized tissue called bone, which is composed of collagen and calcium phosphate. The bones are connected by joints, which allow for movement. The skeleton provides support, protection, and movement for the body.

The human arm and hand bones are composed of the humerus, radius, ulna, carpals, metacarpals, and phalanges. These bones are connected by joints, which allow for movement. The arm and hand bones provide support and movement for the upper limb.

The human leg and foot bones are composed of the femur, tibia, fibula, tarsals, metatarsals, and phalanges. These bones are connected by joints, which allow for movement. The leg and foot bones provide support and movement for the lower limb.

The human joint is the point where two or more bones meet. Joints are classified into different types based on their structure and function. The most common type of joint is the synovial joint, which is characterized by the presence of synovial fluid. Joints allow for movement and provide support for the body.
