| Test 1Heat about half of solid P in boiling tube with Bunsen burner flame.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  | disappears + effsThe white solid forms a colourless liquid, steam effervesces out from the boiling tube and condensation is seen at the top of the boiling tube. After a while the colourless liquid becomes a white solid. |
| Test 2The remaining solid P is dissolved in water to form solution P. Solution P is divided into three portions.To the first portion of solution P, a few drops of sodium hydroxide solution are added and then it is warmed.Repeat the procedure and then using red litmus paper at the mouth of the boiling tube. | no eff ✓ no NH<sub>3</sub> gas ✓ no NH<sub>4</sub>+ ✓no change ✓The colour red litmus paper remains red.                                                                                |
| Test 3To the second portion of solution P, a few drops of dilute hydrochloric acid are added and then it is warmed.                                                                                                                                                                                                         | ✓ white precipitate ✓ SO<sub>4</sub><sup>2-</sup>                                                                                                                                                                        |
| Test 4To the third portion of solution P, with a few drops of acidified aqueous potassium manganate(VII).                                                                                                                                                                                                                   | the solution becomes light purple ✓ SO<sub>4</sub><sup>2-</sup>purple → fading                                                                                                                                |

30. The observations in Test 1 show that solid P is hydrated.

31. Suggest a chemical test to show that the condensation at the top of the boiling tube contains water.
