Abstract—This study examined the impact of the 1996 U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) regulation on the use of infant formula. The regulation required that infant formula be labeled with the amount of iron that could be absorbed by the infant. The study found that the regulation had a significant impact on the use of infant formula, with a decrease in the use of formula that was not labeled with the amount of iron that could be absorbed. The study also found that the regulation had a significant impact on the use of formula that was labeled with the amount of iron that could be absorbed, with an increase in the use of formula that was labeled with the amount of iron that could be absorbed.
