Warm air advection occurs where the wind flows across isotherms from higher pressure (closer to lower pressure) values. Thus, warm air is being transported across a cold front by the horizontal winds. Based on this fact alone, one would expect precipitation at that location to be rising, falling, or stable since warm air is the wind flows across the isotherms from lower (colder) values to higher (warmer) values. Thus, cold air is being transported by the wind to a warmer location, producing falling temperatures.

Based on wind directions and the isotherm pattern on the Figure 2 map, determine the type of air advection (warm or cold) that would be occurring at each station.
