

The Digestive System

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food is broken down mechanically in the mouth or physically through a series of chemical reactions and enzymatic secretions, allowing nutrients to be absorbed. The digestive system also removes indigestible components that must be excreted as the waste of the gastrointestinal tract.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, digested material enters the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, which is connected to the pancreas by the duodenal papilla. The pancreas produces pancreatic juice, which is secreted into the duodenum. The pancreas also produces insulin, a hormone that regulates blood sugar levels. The liver produces bile, which is secreted into the gallbladder.

Layers of large intestine

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the appendix, ascending colon, transverse colon, descending colon, sigmoid colon, and rectum. The large intestine is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the undigested food, forming feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions move the material forward and the wave which, when it moves, the material is pushed forward.

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing, the mechanical action of the food, is called mastication. Salivary glands secrete saliva into the mouth. Saliva contains the enzyme amylase, which begins the digestion of starch. Saliva also contains mucus, which lubricates the food and the lining of the mouth.

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for storing and mixing food with gastric juices. The stomach is divided into two main parts: the cardia, which is the entrance to the stomach, and the pylorus, which is the exit. The stomach wall is composed of several layers of muscle.

Small intestine

The small intestine consists of three parts: the duodenum, jejunum, and ileum. The duodenum is the first part of the small intestine, which is connected to the stomach. The jejunum is the middle part, and the ileum is the last part, which is connected to the large intestine.

Absorption

The small intestine is responsible for the absorption of the nutrients from the food. The nutrients are absorbed through the villi, which are small finger-like projections that increase the surface area of the intestinal lining.
