Chapter 1 Summary

"The Road to War"

The American Revolution began in 1775 when the British and the American colonists fought the Battle of Lexington and Concord. The British were trying to stop the colonists from getting weapons, but the colonists were already armed and ready for battle. The battle was a tactical draw, but it showed that the colonists were now a fighting force. The British then moved on to the Battle of Bunker's Hill, which was also a tactical draw, but it showed that the colonists were now a fighting force. The British then moved on to the Battle of the Clouds, which was also a tactical draw, but it showed that the colonists were now a fighting force.
