Therefore, some individuals may prefer to believe that conceptual change is a process that occurs in the mind, while others may prefer to believe that it is a process that occurs in the world. This is a matter of individual preference, and it is not the purpose of this paper to argue for one position or the other. The purpose of this paper is to provide a conceptual framework for understanding the process of conceptual change, and to show how this framework can be used to understand the process of conceptual change in the classroom.

The above three activities are interconnected and mutually influential, forming a synergistic system to drive green innovation.
