INTRODUCTION

This part of the course will examine a number of issues in connection with death, end-of-life law and assisted dying:

Part 1 – Assisted dying

- A) Euthanasia and the boundary between curing and killing
- B) Assisted suicide

Part 2 – Withdrawing life-sustaining treatmentPART 1 – Assisted dying*Terminology

Euthanasia – actively ending the life of another (can be voluntary, non-voluntary or involuntary). Even a legal prescription, this is murder.

Physician Assisted Suicide (PAS) – where a Dr provides a fatal prescription.

Assisted Suicide – where a lay person (usually relative/friend) assists in suicide.

Assisted Dying – includes both euthanasia (only voluntary?) and PAS. Note that this term is applied flexibly and is subject to interpretation and confusion!

5.1 Euthanasia: The boundary between curing and killing

The criminal law takes no account of motive or consent and so active killing (euthanasia) will always be regarded as murder unless a defence is applicable. You might remember from studying criminal law, some of the defences generally available relate to euthanasia (with respect to the question of either consent or the compassionate motive of the accused) will be relevant to the question of liability. Although, note that some relatives have succeeded in pleading the partial defence of diminished responsibility, where the stress of caring for their sick relative led to a defect in their mental capacity which reduced their responsibility for the killing from murder to voluntary manslaughter.
