G Protein-Coupled Receptors - Modeling and Simulation Marta Filizola, 2013-10-25 G protein coupled receptors GPCRs are heptahelical transmembrane receptors that convert extra cellular stimuli into intra cellular signaling and ultimately into biological responses Since GPCRs are natural targets for approximately 40% of all modern medicines it is not surprising that they have been the subject of intense research Notwithstanding the amount of data generated over the years discovering ligands of these receptors with optimal therapeutic properties is not straightforward and has certainly been hampered for years by the lack of high resolution structural information about these receptors Luckily there has been a steady increase of high resolution crystal structures of these receptors since 2007 and this information integrated with dynamic inferences from computational and experimental methods holds great potential for the discovery of new improved drugs This book which provides for the first time state of the art views on modeling and simulation of GPCRs is divided into 4 parts In the first part the impact of currently available GPCR crystal structures on structural modeling is discussed extensively as are critical insights from simulations in the second part of the book The third part reports recent progress in rational ligand discovery and mathematical modeling whereas the fourth part provides an overview of bioinformatics tools and resources that are available for GPCRs

Combining Computational and Experimental Approaches to Characterize Ion Channels and Transporters Christoph Fahlke, Han Sun, Walter Sandtner, Klaus Schicker, Jan-Philippe Machtens, 2023-11-28 Electrical signals in living cells arise from ion channels which cause rapid changes of the membrane potential by the selective passage of certain ions across the membrane and transporters which generate ion gradients on a slower time scale and thus provide the energetic basis for the passive ion flux through channels Ion channels and transporters are expressed in almost every living cell and fulfil a plethora of distinct cellular functions An increasing number of human diseases are caused by dysfunctional ion channels or transporters makes these proteins important targets for pharmaceutical interventions Understanding the structural dynamics of ion channels and transporters at atomic resolution will provide new insight into their function and represents an important step towards designing blockers or activators to specifically modulate their function as therapeutic option in diseases
