6. A business should be clear why it is considering selling on the internet – to open up the business to a much bigger market and increase sales? – should this happen, has it got the productive capacity and the financial resources to expand?

Factors to consider might include:

- Review the logistics of selling online – can you deliver the product easily and cost-effectively to customers?
- A website needs to be designed – need to employ a specialist designer to produce a functional website?
- Determine how the business will market products – decide how to create a large amount of traffic on website.
- Need to review costs (extra costs) associated with online selling, e.g. cost of designing, maintaining, hosting website – marketing expenses, payment processing costs.
- Need to do a cost/benefit exercise – is profitability maintained or enhanced or depressed?
- Continue with traditional selling to spread the risk?
- How well will the internet serve your business needs?
- How well will your particular business model fit into the way the World Wide Web works? (context to be referenced).

Marking: The context in this question is 'electronic goods manufacturer'.

(Evaluative discussion of main factors that could be considered (in context). [17–20]

Analysis of main factors to consider (in context). [13–16]

Good understanding of main factors to consider. [11–12]

Some understanding of main factors to consider. [5–10]

Very limited understanding of factors affecting selling on internet. [1–4]

7. (a) The inherent strengths of family owned businesses – businesses where the voting majority is in the hands of the controlling family – are many for example:

- family dedicated to business – work hard to build and grow the company and re-invest profits and
- there is pride and focus in reputation and quality of product and maintain good relations with external stakeholders.

But, the weaknesses often outweigh the strengths, weaknesses such as:

- complexity of different roles played by family members and governance problems – different motives and strategies from different family members
- too much informality, not enough clear business practices and procedures – with growth may come significant conflict
- neglect of strategic management, succession planning, lack of external management expertise
- plus, family owned businesses may have poor cost control, poor cash flow, poor management
- means that the majority of family owned businesses are not sustainable
- discipline difficulties i.e. reluctance to discipline or sack family members
- family arguments might be brought into the work situation.
