Lawless,2013-11-08 The field of sensory evaluation has matured in the last half century to be come a recognized discipline in the food and consumer sciences and an important part of the foods and consumer products industries. Sensory professionals enjoy widespread recognition for the important services they provide in new product development, basic research, ingredient and process modification, cost reduction, quality maintenance, and product optimization. These services enhance the informational support for management decisions, lowering the risk that accompanies the decision making process. From the consumers perspective, a sensory testing program in a food or consumer products company helps ensure that products reach the market with not only good concepts but also with desirable sensory attributes that meet their expectations. Sensory professionals have advanced well beyond the stage when they were simply called on to execute taste tests and to provide statistical summaries of results. They are now frequently asked to participate in the decision process itself to draw reasoned conclusions based on data and to make recommendations. They are also expected to be well versed in an increasingly sophisticated battery of test methods and statistical procedures including multivariate analyses. As always, sensory professionals also need to understand people for people are the measuring instruments that provide the basic sensory data. People are notoriously variable and difficult to calibrate, presenting the sensory specialist with many additional measurement problems that are not present in instrumental methods.
