

The Digestive System

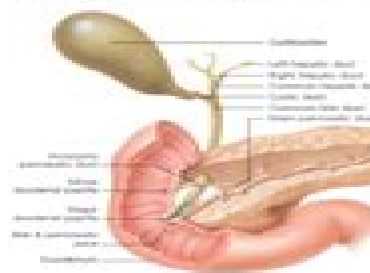

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food is broken down mechanically in the mouth or physically through a series of chemical reactions and enzymatic secretions, allowing nutrients to be absorbed. The digestive system also removes indigestible components that enter the body, as is expected in the case of the gastrointestinal tract.

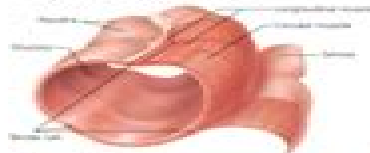

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, digested material enters the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, which is connected to the pancreas by the pancreatic duct. This duct is a branching system on the pancreas, with the duodenum system connecting to the main pancreatic duct. The pancreas also connects to the duodenum through the common bile duct, which carries bile from the gallbladder to the duodenum.

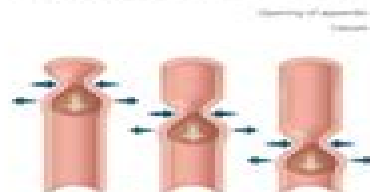

Layers of large intestine

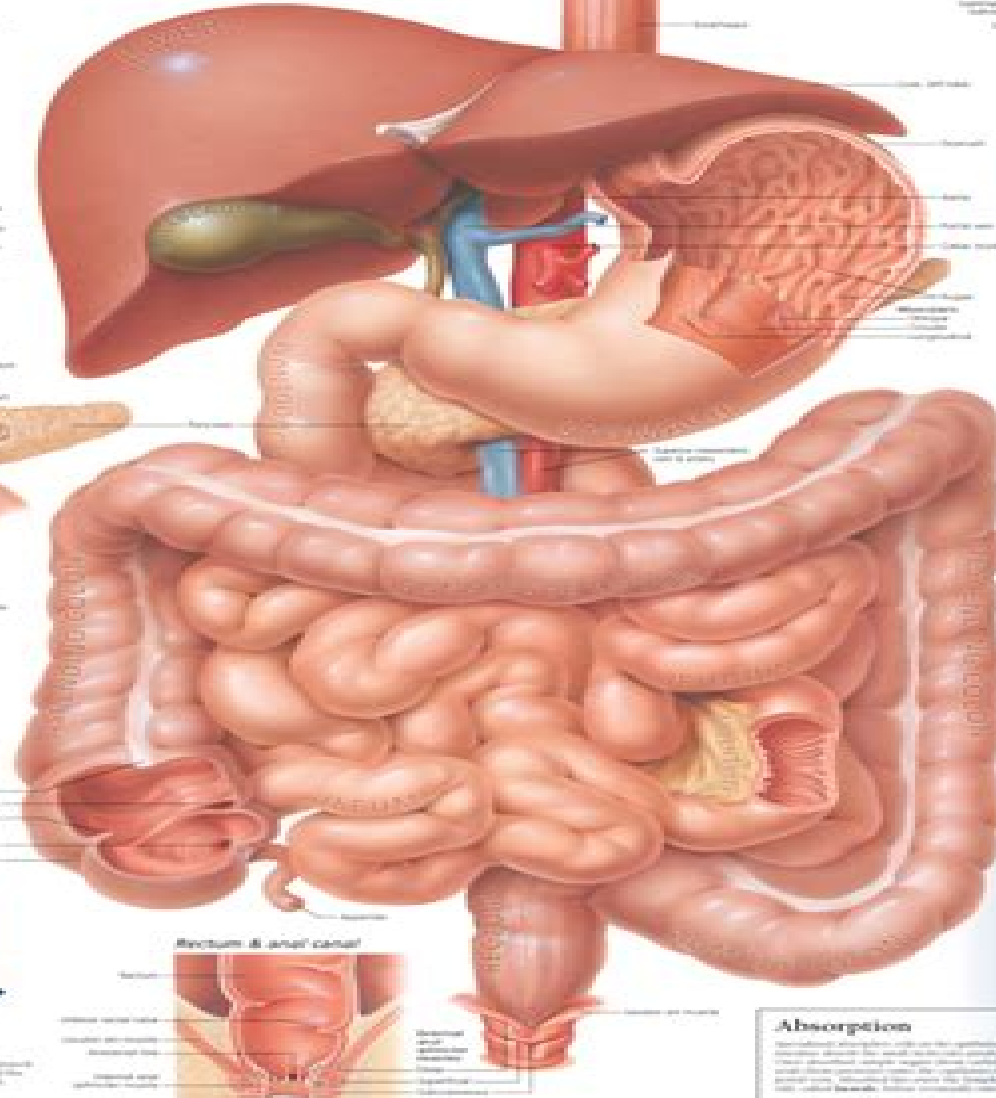

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the appendix, ascending, transverse, descending, and sigmoid colon, and the rectum. The large intestine is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the undigested food, forming stool.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions move the material forward and the food is broken down and absorbed.

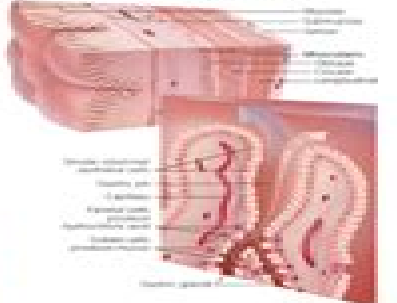

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing the food breaks it into smaller pieces, making it easier to swallow. Saliva, secreted by the salivary glands, moistens the food and helps in the digestion of carbohydrates. Saliva also contains enzymes that break down food into smaller pieces, making it easier to swallow. Saliva also contains enzymes that break down food into smaller pieces, making it easier to swallow.

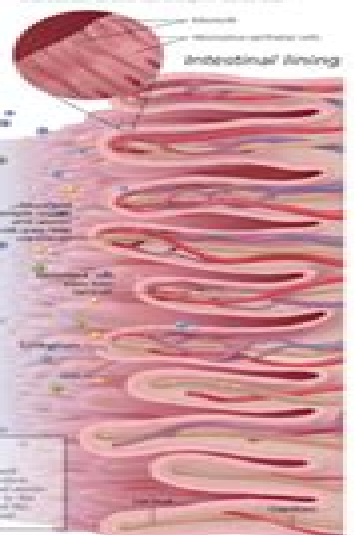

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for digesting food. It is located in the upper left part of the abdomen. The stomach is divided into two main parts: the fundus (upper part) and the pylorus (lower part). The pylorus is responsible for moving food into the small intestine.

Small intestine

The small intestine is a long, coiled tube that is responsible for digesting food. It is located in the lower right part of the abdomen. The small intestine is divided into three parts: the duodenum (first part), the jejunum (middle part), and the ileum (last part). The ileum is responsible for moving food into the large intestine.

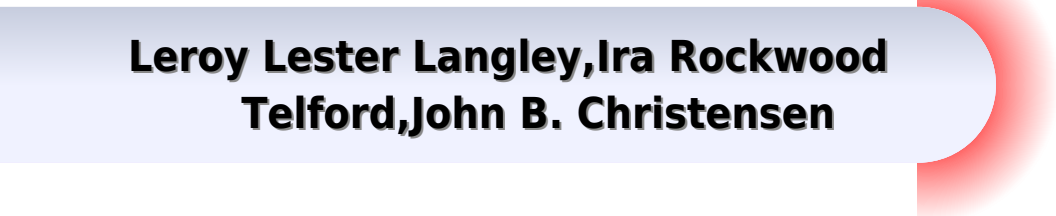

Absorption

The small intestine is responsible for absorbing the nutrients from the food. The nutrients are absorbed through the walls of the small intestine and enter the bloodstream. The large intestine is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the undigested food.
