

The V.A.T.S. and the PassKeyII system can cause problems when remote starting because the key, with the coded resistor pellet, is supposed to start the vehicle. In order to be able to remote start a vehicle with one of these systems, the V.A.T.S. or PassKeyII computer will "learn" the same resistor value for within 10% of the resistor in the key. This can be done by equating a resistor of the same value as the little key and pre-setting this resistor value on the wires which link the ignition switch to the computer. The value of the resistor pellet is can be found by using a Volt/Ohm meter. Touch each side of the resistor pellet with the probes from the meter, being careful not to touch any of the probe with your hands. The meter may have to be set to a multiplier of up to 100k to read the resistor value. Note: General only used 15 different resistor codes, the table below lists all of these resistor values and the colors codes of the bands on these k. Once the resistor value is found, equate a resistor of the same value and follow the diagram below to interface the resistor with the system's remote start to operate successfully.
