

FROM THE EDITOR-IN-CHIEF'S DESK

Michele L. Cooney

Greetings! My name is Michele Cooney, and I have recently been appointed as your new Editor-in-Chief, after having served as the journal's Special Issues Editor for the past two years. Kristin Carter stepped down from this position in late July due to increased workload associated with her Assistant State Geologist position. She will remain onboard with the Editorial Committee, though, as Managing Editor for the next couple years.

The December issue of Environmental Geosciences will wrap up another wonderful year of thought-provoking science and impressive manuscripts! Readers can look forward to James Rine's evaluation of the economics of climate change and the impact of government response on the petroleum industry by examining fossil fuel production numbers, emissions, and how regulations may affect future production. In the meantime, you will get a sneak peak of this discussion when you read Jim's editorial on carbon, taxes, and attitudes toward global warming in this newsletter. Our second manuscript from George Case, Amy Weislogel, and Keith Coffindaffer explores the characterization of diagenetic properties for predicting post- CO_2 injection changes in the Donovan Sand member of the Rodessa Formation in Alabama.

Thank you to all of our authors, readers, and staff for another successful year of Environmental Geosciences!

CARBON, TAXES, ATTITUDES TO GLOBAL WARMING, AND AAPG

Contributor's Comments by James M. Rine (Member of DEG/AAPG)

The main theme of the paper "An Examination of Carbon Budgets, Carbon Taxes, Industry Attitudes to Global Warming, and AAPG" (December 2014 Environmental Geosciences) is a search for reasons behind AAPG's lack of a public stand regarding anthropogenic climate change. AAPG's current stand can be summarized as "...

research into the basic controls on climate is important" (<http://dga.aapg.org/gac/statements/climatechange.cfm>). The paper's search is precipitated by a kind of cognitive dissonance that has recently developed within AAPG over this issue. On one hand, a number of large oil companies not only admit to the existence of anthropogenic climate change but are also planning for it. Concurrently a number of senior AAPG members are vocally denying its importance or even the existence global warming.

Instead of discussing the science behind climate change, the paper explores the premise that a major reason AAPG and many of its members either ignore or deny the issue is due to perceived economic self-interests. To address the economics, the paper examines past and projected fossil fuel production statistics, calculating their resulting emissions, and then projects how likely carbon regulations may affect future coal, oil, and natural gas production. The paper then compares AAPG's position with other organizations, especially major energy companies who are apparently concluding that addressing the issue makes more economic sense than ignoring it.

The paper concludes that by ignoring the issue of climate change, AAPG is benefiting the producers of coal over the producers of oil and natural gas. Coal is the proverbial "800 pound guerilla" on the global warming stage. Based on correlations of past and future CO_2 fossil fuel emissions with a widely cited climate model (Meinshausen and others, 2009), the paper hypothesizes that all proven global reserves of oil and natural gas (as of 2012) could be burned without exceeding a 50% probability of reaching a global temperature rise of 2°C (3.6°F) assuming no additional coal is consumed. Admittedly, a 50-50 chance of the world doing itself serious harm by exceeding 2°C are not odds to be wished on one's children and grandchildren. But if all the proven reserves of coal (which comprises 67% of potential CO_2 emissions) were consumed, our offspring would be figuratively (and perhaps literally) "toast."

Another premise of the paper is that because of impending regulations and other possible economic factors, it doesn't really matter if climate change is real or not. Presently, 167 countries, including the world's largest CO_2 emitters (USA, China, India, and Russia) have formally agreed to limit their CO_2 emissions to avoid a 2°C rise in global temperatures. In addition, some environmental groups are capitalizing on these impending global restrictions by lobbying cities, universities/colleges, and other organizations to divest their investment portfolios of fossil fuel related stocks. The most noteworthy recruits to this campaign are Stanford University and the World Council of Churches, an organization that represents over a half-billion Christians.

Exclusion and Inclusion in International Migration: Power, Resistance and Identity Armağan Teke Lloyd, 2019-04-30

People on the move face new barriers in a globalizing world Some of these barriers are related with the rise of an increasingly security oriented approach towards international migrants Notwithstanding the forces of globalization states have maintained their monopoly power over whom to admit and whom to deny within their borders In other words they remain the sovereign authority regulating the entry and exit of people However in recent years a number of states have singled out international immigration as the greatest political and social threat to their cultural and national security The securitization of immigration is founded upon the premise that the international movement of people represents an exceptional risk for the survival of the nation and this is often associated with terrorism instability and criminality The securitization of immigration is also based on the idea that the traditional authority vested in states to regulate immigration is somehow insufficient and needs to be enhanced These assumptions correspond with a real policy shift in some countries such as the United States where the government is planning to spend approximately 23 Billion Dollars on border security and immigration enforcement in 2019 alone This edited volume is an exploration of the global landscapes inhabited by refugees and labour migrants although the focus is largely on the former Despite the fact that most of the empirical studies are drawn from within Europe the book also includes research on Nepal Australia the Middle East and Japan in order to reveal the truly global dimensions of migration and the regimes governing this

Legal Phantoms Susan Bibler Coutin,Jennifer M. Chacón,Stephen Lee,2024-01-30 The 2012 Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals DACA program was supposed to be a stepping stone a policy innovation announced by the White House designed to put pressure on Congress for a broader lasting set of legislative changes Those changes never materialized and the people who hoped to benefit from them have been forced to navigate a tense and contradictory policy landscape ever since haunted by these unfulfilled promises Legal Phantoms tells their story After Congress failed to pass a comprehensive immigration bill in 2013 President Obama pivoted in 2014 to supplementing DACA with a deferred action program known as DAPA for the parents of citizens and lawful permanent residents and a DACA expansion DACA in 2014 But challenges from Republican led states prevented even these programs from going into effect Interviews with would be applicants immigrant rights advocates and government officials reveal how such failed immigration reform efforts continue to affect not only those who had hoped to benefit but their families communities and the country in which they have made an uneasy home Out of the ashes of these lost dreams though people find their own paths forward through uncharted legal territory with creativity and resistance
