
Accounting 101 Exam 3 With Complete Solution

Cash Transactions - ANSWER In accounting, the term cash is used for currency, coins, checks, money orders, and funds on deposit in a bank. Most cash transactions involve checks.

Cash Proof - ANSWER At the end of the day, the store manager prints transaction totals from the cash register. The store manager and the cash register clerk should both count the cash in that clerk's cash drawer. The store manager should prepare a cash proof. The cash proof verifies that the amount in the cash register, less the change fund, equals the amount shown on the cash register transaction totals.

Over or Short - ANSWER When cash receipts are more than the sales per the cash register tape, cash is over. When cash receipts are less than the sales per the cash register tape, cash is short.

Record short or over amounts in the Cash Short or Over account. If the account has a credit balance, there is an overage, which is treated as revenue. If the account has a debit balance, there is a shortage, which is treated as an expense.

Cash Received on Account- Statement of Account - ANSWER Maxx-Out Sporting Goods makes sales on account and bills customers once a month. It sends a statement of account that shows the transactions during the month and the balance owed. Customers are asked to pay within 30 days of receiving the statement. Checks from credit customers are journalized and posted, and then the checks are deposited in the bank.

A promissory note - ANSWER A promissory note is a written promise to pay a specified amount of money on a certain date. Most notes require that interest is paid at a specified rate. Businesses use promissory notes to extend credit for some sales transactions.

Sometimes promissory notes are used to replace an accounts receivable balance when the account is overdue. For example, on July 31 Maxx-Out Sporting Goods accepted a six-month promissory note from Stacey Fairley, who owed $800 on account (see Figure 9.1). Fairley had asked for more time to pay his balance. Maxx-Out Sporting Goods agreed to grant more time if Fairley signed a promissory note with 9 percent annual interest. The note provides more legal protection than an account receivable. The interest is compensation for the delay in receiving payment.

Petty Cash Fund - ANSWER In a well-managed business, most bills are paid by check. However, there are times when small expenditures are made with currency and coins.
