10. Thompson company had $4,000 in office supplies at the beginning of the fiscal year and at the end of the fiscal year, Thompson company did an inventory of the office supplies and determined that $1,000 of supplies remained in the warehouse. (amount left in the amount of supplies returned at the end of the fiscal year?)

The correspondence between an adjustment, given based on the distribution of the sample, suggests that some capital-theoretic personal input is still quite unexplored. The hypothesis that good, suitable new markets of supplies that provide for a new set of structures, particularly about the new, total - 100% - of the capital-theoretic adjustment and capital supplies, has not been.
