

	Behavioral Approach	Social Learning Theory	Cognitive Approach	Biological Approach	Evolutionary Approach	Humanistic Approach
Assumptions on development	The processes that underpin learning are continuous, occurring at any age	Some are behaviours	People learn out of social development, particularly the idea of mirror neurons (observed as they get older)	Evolutionarily determined structures through which influence behaviour of topics (evolutionary adaptation)	The most advanced theory of development. Very complex and processes in operation (social impact)	The development of the self is ongoing throughout life
Major features	Believe we think about or learn. All behaviour comes about through learned associations and reinforcement	As for behaviourism with additional provision of observation and imitation	Behaviour that may be an information processing ability are more like an implicitly held by experience	Learning is driven by behaviour from them. The point that point in about from our parents	Suggests that much of our behaviour is driven by biological and social factors, but also that the person's relationship with the world is crucial (L.A.)	Suggests generally, humans and other animals of having a critical impact on the person self's growth
Behavioural / Factors	Behaviour is complex learning. It is a process. requires skills for some of learning. It is a controlled by environment	Behaviourism has superior factors relevant with the external environment	Behavioural reductionism, use of the information processing ability and the fact that it governs human emotion	Behaviour and emotion. Human behaviour is the result of the genes or nature	Behavioural behaviour is influenced by biological drives and external factors, although the person is not necessarily a passive recipient of these influences	Anti-reductionism. Based on holistic investigations of all aspects of the individual
Disadvantages / Free will	All behaviour is environmentally determined by external forces that we cannot control	We are influenced by our environment and the external forces influence upon it (reduced determinism)	Suggests as we are the behaviour of our behaviour but only within the limits of what we have built (determinism)	A form of genetic determinism. Much of our behaviour is controlled by nature (nature)	Overemphasized focus on our biological aspects. Behavioural aspects are determined by our controlled world (determinism)	Human beings have free will and are not just subjects who are determined their own development
Practical applications / (or features)	Systematic desensitization has been applied successfully to treatment of phobias	Let's be application but has been used to explain how behaviours such as aggression can be learnt without the need for direct reinforcement	CBT has been identified as effective treatment for many conditions including depression and CBT aims to identify and evaluate faulty thinking which is believed to be the root cause of maladaptive behaviour	Behavioural the treatment of mental disorders with the use of drugs	Psychoanalysis and the first talking therapy, and has some degree of success for some conditions such as depression but not others like schizophrenia	Emphasizing experiments based on animal using subjects. Inquiry as the basis to change the gap between the actual self and the ideal self. It's got closer to explaining self in behaviour
Scientific / Academic / Ideological	Highly objective and experimentally based. Focusing only on measurable behaviour	Research investigation can be replicated due to use of scientific method	Based processes are tested using scientific methods but as they are often internal as they are not directly measurable	Uses more scientific methods such as drugs, studies and many other scientific techniques that are objective. Results can be replicated	Used scientific application due to use of case studies and subjective interpretation of clients' dreams / free association	Are against the use of scientific methods as they argue they are inappropriate for studying the complexities of human consciousness and experience
