Differences in Perceptual Decision Making Joseph W. Houpt, Cheng-Ta Yang, James T. Townsend, 2017-01-18 To deal with the abundant amount of information in the environment in order to achieve our goals human beings adopt a strategy to accumulate some information and filter out other information to ultimately make decisions Since the development of cognitive science in the 1960s researchers have been interested in understanding how human beings process and accumulate information for decision making Researchers have conducted extensive behavioral studies and applied a wide range of modeling tools to study human behavior in simple detection tasks and two choice decision tasks e g discrimination classification In general researchers often assume that the manner in which information is processed for decision making is invariant across individuals given a particular experimental context Independent variables including speed accuracy instructions stimulus properties i e intensity and characteristics of the participants i e aging cognitive ability are assumed to affect the parameters in a model i e speed of information accumulation response bias but not the way that participants process information e g the order of information processing Given these assumptions much modeling has been accomplished based on the grouped data rather than the individual data However a growing number of studies have demonstrated that there were individual differences in the perceptual decision process In the same task context different groups of the participants may process information in different manners The capacity and architecture of the decision mechanism were found to vary across individuals implying that humans decision strategies can vary depending on the context to maximize their performance In this special issue we focused on a particular subset of cognitive models particularly accumulator models multinomial processing trees and systems factorial technology SFT as applied to perceptual decision making The motivation for the focus on perceptual decision making is threefold Empirical studies of perception have grown out of a history of making a large number of observations for each individual so as to achieve precise estimates of each individual's performance. This type of data rather than a small number of observations per individual is most amenable to achieving precision in individual level and group level cognitive modeling. Second, the interaction between the acquisition of perceptual information and the decisions based on that information to the extent that those processes are distinguishable offers rich data for scientific exploration. Finally, there is an increasing interest in the practical application of individual variation in perceptual ability whether to inform perceptual training and expertise or to guide personnel decisions. Although these practical applications are beyond the scope of this issue, we hope that the research presented herein may serve as the foundation for future endeavors in that domain.

Connecting People to Their Oceans: Issues and Options for Effective Ocean Literacy Angel Borja, Francesca Santoro, Gail Scowcroft, Stephen Fletcher, Pierre Strosser, 2020-03-25. While there is growing evidence of the importance of marine ecosystems for our societies, evidence shows also that pressures from human activities on these ecosystems are increasing, putting the health of marine ecosystems at stake worldwide. Hence, Blue Economy is becoming an important component of future socio-economic development strategies. e.g. this is called Blue Growth in Europe that eventually can result in increasing pressures at sea and despite the current regulatory framework in particular with the Oceans Act in USA or Canada and the Marine Strategy Framework Directive in Europe, it is likely that this situation will continue in the future. Ensuring all those connected to the sea directly or indirectly gain a better understanding of the importance of the seas, the human-sea interactions and opportunities to act better and reduce impacts from human pressures is central to Ocean Literacy (OL). Receiving increasing attention in Europe and USA, OL is a challenge for all parts of society: educators, the role OL could play in interaction with innovation, regulation, economic incentive, social norms to support human capital development as a key component of sustainable growth and 3 pre-conditions for effective OL for different sectors and target groups. Questions relevant to OL include: Which knowledge produced by whom to share and how? Who to target and how to effectively reach those targeted? How to design OL initiatives including by mobilizing those targeted via living lab approaches e.g. to ensure effective OL and pave the way for behavior change What are the knowledge gaps that limit our capacity to design effective OL As scientists it is likely you have many more questions to offer and discuss An Open Book: What and How Young Children Learn From Picture and Story Books Jessica S. Horst, Carmel Houston-Price, 2016-01-21 Looking at and listening to picture and story books is a ubiquitous activity frequently enjoyed by many young children and their parents Well before children can read for themselves they are able to learn from books Looking at and listening to books increases children's general knowledge understanding about the world and promotes language acquisition This collection of papers demonstrates the breadth of information pre-reading children learn from books and increases our understanding of the social and cognitive mechanisms that support this learning Our hope is that this Research Topic eBook will be useful for researchers as well as educational practitioners and parents who are interested in optimizing children's learning Arts & Humanities Citation Index, 1995 A multidisciplinary index covering the journal literature of the arts and humanities It fully covers 1,144 of the world's leading arts and humanities journals and it indexes individually selected relevant items from over 6,800 major science and social science journals
