The Water Cycle

Have you ever wondered how the Earth does not run out of water? Our Earth has a process of reusing water in a cycle. A cycle is like a circle, it goes around with no end. The water cycle happens because of a change of energy. The change of energy causes the temperature to change. The water cycle is made up of four main parts: precipitation, collection, evaporation and transpiration, and condensation.

Precipitation is when water comes down from the clouds in the form of rain, snow, sleet, or hail.

Evaporation is when the sun soaks up water from rivers, lakes, oceans, and the ground and turns it into a gas.

Transpiration is when the plants lose water through their leaves, it helps evaporation.
