

Airplanes

Within a century, airplanes have not only fulfilled humanity's ancient wish to fly but also have become a means of transportation used by many people and can quickly cover great distances. Even though the earliest models—made of wood, fabric, and steel—have evolved into huge jets capable of carrying hundreds of passengers over oceans, as well as into supersonic military aircraft, all planes are governed by the same physical laws.

Hold Up by the Air

The speed and lift of an airplane is largely a result of the air it is in. This image shows the air flowing over the wing of an airplane. The air is pushed down by the wing, creating a pressure difference that lifts the plane. The air is pushed down by the wing, creating a pressure difference that lifts the plane.

Propulsion

In order to fly, an airplane must be constantly propelled forward. The most common method of propulsion is the jet engine, which uses the reaction force of hot gases to push the plane forward.

- 1 The air enters the engine and is compressed.
- 2 The compressed air is heated by the fuel, creating a high-pressure gas.
- 3 The high-pressure gas expands and is pushed out of the engine, creating a reaction force that pushes the plane forward.
- 4 The plane moves forward, creating a high-speed flow of air over the wings.

Jet Engines

Mach

A Mach number is a ratio of the speed of an object to the speed of sound. It is used to describe the flow of a fluid (such as air) around an object. The Mach number is a dimensionless quantity that is used to describe the flow of a fluid (such as air) around an object.

In Flight

When an airplane is in flight, it is subject to a variety of forces that must be balanced in order to maintain a steady course. These forces include lift, drag, thrust, and weight.

Lift

Lift is the upward force that acts on an airplane, keeping it in the air. It is created by the pressure difference between the top and bottom of the wing.

Drag

Drag is the force that opposes the motion of an airplane. It is created by the friction between the air and the surface of the plane.

Thrust

Thrust is the forward force that acts on an airplane, pushing it forward. It is created by the engines, which use the reaction force of hot gases to push the plane forward.

Altitude

Altitude is the height of an airplane above the ground. It is measured in feet or meters. The altitude of an airplane is determined by the balance of lift and drag forces.
