

Analysis of a Squirrel Gene Pool

Suppose that, after a natural disaster, a small population of 2000 squirrels were left behind. Between 1970 and 1990, they appeared at three different locations around town at about the same time. These squirrels are genetically all alike and appear identical to the other squirrel species around town. Geneticists have identified a mutation in the MC1R gene that causes the white coloration. The gene has been identified as a mutation in the MC1R gene that causes the white coloration. The mutation is a change in the sequence of the DNA code that codes for the protein that produces the color. The mutation is a change in the sequence of the DNA code that codes for the protein that produces the color.

Suppose that the three different locations are all at the same time.
