One important class of chemical reactions is double-displacement reactions. These occur when opposite (and) homopolar-covalent bonding results in replacing ions. For example, in the following double-displacement reaction, the products are:

The next two theories concern how these "hidden" factors are related to the observed and unobserved latent components. The latent factors that correspond to the  $k$  observed variables arise from the variance-covariance and the means. In general, the observed variables are modeled as a function of the latent variables. In the first approach, the observed variables are modeled as a function of the latent variables, a function that is called a structural equation. In some modeling approaches, however, one of the observed variables is chosen to equal a  $z$  or "latent" or a "general" variable, interpreted as an unobserved variable.
