

Diuretic of Choice in ABFM Hypertension Self-Assessment Module Simulations

Michael D. Hagen, MD, Walton Sumner, MD, and Haiqi Fu, MS

Background: Evidence suggests that chlorthalidone has therapeutic advantages over hydrochlorothiazide, perhaps because of a longer antihypertensive effect. Although guidelines such as the Seventh Report of the Joint National Committee on Prevention, Detection, Evaluation, and Treatment of High Blood Pressure treat diuretics as a class, some experts believe chlorthalidone is the diuretic of choice in hypertension management. We evaluated diplomates' use of chlorthalidone and hydrochlorothiazide as first-choice diuretics in virtual patient simulations of hypertension in the American Board of Family Medicine Maintenance of Certification for Family Physicians self-assessment modules.

Methods: We examined action logs for hypertension simulations completed between 2004 and 2011 and identified initial antihypertensive choices made by diplomates. We tabulated uses of any diuretic as initial treatment, distinguishing between chlorthalidone, hydrochlorothiazide, and other diuretic choices. We examined trends in the use of diuretics and chlorthalidone in simulations using linear models.

Results: Chlorthalidone use increased 0.7 percentage points per year (test for $\beta > 0$, $P < .0013$), from approximately 1.3% of simulation prescriptions in 2004 to about 4.8% in 2010 and 2011, whereas hydrochlorothiazide prescriptions fell 2 percentage points per year ($P = .035$), from nearly 57% to 47%. As a fraction of all diuretic use, chlorthalidone increased 1.4 percentage points per year ($P = .0006$), from 2% to 9%.

Conclusions: Small but growing numbers of diplomates are heeding recommendations in the growing literature to start with chlorthalidone rather than hydrochlorothiazide, at least in the virtual patient environment. Observed choices in virtual patient management strongly imply that this is a valid topic for additional attention in the hypertension self-assessment module. (J Am Board Fam Med 2012;25: 805–809.)

Keywords: Chlorthalidone, Hydrochlorothiazide, Hypertension, Thiazide Diuretics

The Seventh Report of the Joint National Committee on Prevention, Detection, Evaluation, and Treatment of High Blood Pressure (JNC 7) emphasized the role of thiazide diuretics as initial therapy for hypertension.¹ In the United States, the thiazide diuretic hydrochlorothiazide remains the most frequently prescribed antihypertensive agent.² However, a number of authors recently have called for reexamination of this choice, pointing out that the original studies demonstrating diuretic antihypertensive efficacy used chlorthalidone.^{3–7}

Since 2004 the American Board of Family Medicine has offered a hypertension self-assessment module (SAM) in the Maintenance of Certification for Family Physicians program.⁸ The SAM consists of 2 parts: a 60-item knowledge assessment and a clinical simulation that focuses on management of a patient with hypertension. Both the knowledge assessment and clinical simulation have emphasized the recommendations presented in the JNC 7 and have not included explicit information reflecting
