1. Psychological and social factors that causes the development of the disorders

Schizophrenia is a serious mental illness that interferes with a person's ability to think clearly, manage emotions, make decisions and relate to others. According to the National Alliance on Mental Illness (What is Schizophrenia, NAMI), the exact prevalence of schizophrenia is difficult to measure, but estimates range from 0.25% to 0.64% of U.S. adults. Although schizophrenia can occur at any age, the average age of onset tends to be in the late teens to the early 20s for men, and the late 20s to early 30s for women. It is uncommon for schizophrenia to be diagnosed in a person younger than 12 or older than 40. It is possible to live well with schizophrenia.

Researchers also suggested that the several possible causes of schizophrenia can be genetics which involves the interplay between genetics and environment, although heredity has more than six (6) times the higher possibility of the likelihood of the development of schizophrenia among close relatives. Involvement of the environment such as exposure to viruses or malnutrition can show symptoms of the disorder. Furthermore, the implication of problems with brain chemicals and substance use increases the risk of ongoing psychotic experiences which necessitate the development of schizophrenia.

2. Struggles and difficulties experienced by the individual, family and the community in managing psychological disorders.

In the case of Ricky, his family has experienced direct difficulties dealing with his disorder. Although Ricky had shown signs of schizophrenia which had no awareness towards the disorder and its implications had neglected it, which they had no grasp of. During Ricky's college years he was introduced to drugs that made him a terrifying experience. After confessing his intake of drugs he has prescribed a medication which he had neglected on ingesting and behaves either refuse or exhilarated to eat.

He had been showing unusual behaviors of screaming at someone, sleeping during the day, and staying awake most of the night while listening to loud music, when he went out he would dress "incognito". These behaviors cause embarrassment, especially in moments where they have to be seen with Ricky
