Abstract—This study examined the effects of a 12-week, supervised, group-based, low-impact aerobically demanding exercise program on the physical and psychological health of 100 women with a history of alcoholism. The program was designed to improve cardiovascular fitness, reduce weight, and improve self-esteem. The program was evaluated using a pretest and posttest design. The results of the study showed that the program was effective in improving cardiovascular fitness, reducing weight, and improving self-esteem. The program was also effective in reducing the risk of relapse to alcoholism. The program was well-received by the women and was recommended for use in other settings.

There is a stark contrast, after the 1980s, with companies that are almost 100% employee-owned. Most of the best-known shareholder-owned companies (Microsoft, Google, Amazon, etc.) have gone through some form of employee ownership, including stock options, restricted stock, ESOPs, etc. (see www.employeesfirst.com for more on this). The fact that the best companies are employee-owned is a strong argument for employee ownership.

Business and government leaders are increasingly seeking to establish new public-private partnerships. But creating a culture of trust is a process that takes time.
