

HISTORY OF PUBLIC FISCAL ADMINISTRATION

1. Ancient/ Primitive Period

- Citizens render services as a contribution to the maintenance of the government.
- Barter is their mode of exchange of goods and products.
- There is no public finance.

2. Classical Period

- The state's officer income came from mines, productive enterprises, and taxes upon tributary or high-class people.
- Revenue obtained such as lands, cattle, and slaves is the constituents of the king's revenue. There is forced work levied to the people.
- Financial institutions were created by kings and rulers. The tributary individual acknowledged their submission to the monarchs by paying tribute in the form of money and other valuables in exchange for peace and security.
- Public existence is associated with family and religion.

3. Medieval Period

- European History between the Ancient and Modern Time.

a. Feudalism

A contractual system of political and military relationships existed among the nobility. It varies through the granting of fiefs land, and labor in return for political and military services of the landlords and kings. The contract is secured by oaths of homage and fealty (fidelity). The grantor is the lord, and the grantee is his vassal who holds the land.

A vassal offers his master a variety of activities and services in exchange for the land (fief). He was required to turn over a portion of his collected rent and agricultural products to his lord to contribute to his prosperity.

b. Manorialism/ Seigniorialism

Seigniorialism is a system of political, economic, and social relations between seigneurs (lords) and their dependent farm laborers. The manorial system is presided over by the lord. It could be a king, an ecclesiastical lord, a baron, or a lesser noble. The peasants may inherit the title to the property, the right to raise the dues, and the right to cultivate. The lord provides the peasants with military defense.

c. End of Feudalism and Manorialism

The end of feudalism and the manorial system are brought about by economic and political factors and natural calamities. The concentration of power in the hands of a few or of an absolute monarch is a great disruptive force in the feudal system. At the end of feudalism emerged three schools of thought: mercantilism, cameralism, and physiocracy
