Heat Shock Proteins and the Cardiovascular System A.A. Knowlton, 2012-12-06 Heat shock proteins HSP were originally described in heat shocked drosophila by Ritossa in the early 1960 s In the last 5 years it has become apparent that these heat shock proteins have important functions both in the normal cell and in the stressed cell These proteins constitute an endogenous protective system mutations in the heat shock proteins can be lethal and there are no known organisms without heat shock proteins The first observations on heat shock proteins and the heart were made in the 1980 s and interest in these proteins increased over the decade In the last few years there has been an exponential growth in number of papers published on heat shock proteins and the heart Heat shock proteins have been implicated in a number of cardiovascular research areas including ischemia hypertrophy aging and atherosclerosis and this list is growing The purpose of this volume is to give an overview of our current understanding of the heat shock proteins in the cardiovascular system and to summarize the approaches to the study of heat shock proteins in the heart This volume assembles results from a number of different cardiovascular fields and provides a comprehensive review of heat shock proteins in the cardiovascular system Advances in Neutron Capture Therapy R.F. Barth, D.E. Carpenter, A.H. Soloway, 2012-12-06 Binary systems for the treatment of cancer potentially are among the most attractive of the new therapeutic modalities that currently are under investigation The basic concept is to selectively destroy malignant cells while concomitantly sparing normal tissue Neutron capture therapy NCT is the binary system that has been the subject of the Fifth International Symposium on Neutron Capture Therapy which was held September 13-17 1992 in Columbus Ohio under the auspices of the International Society for Neutron Capture Therapy Its objective was to bring together researchers from throughout the world and to provide a forum at which they could present the latest advances in the development of Neutron capture therapy Neutron capture therapy has largely but not exclusively focused on the use of boron 10 as the target nuclide Boron neutron capture therapy BNCT is based on the nuclear reaction that occurs when the stable isotope boron 10 absorbs low energy non ionizing thermal neutrons to yield alpha particles and recoiling lithium 7 nuclei The size and energy of these high linear energy transfer LET particles result in their being confined largely to the cells in which the capture reaction occurs For BNCT to be successful a sufficient number of B atoms must be localized within neoplastic cells and enough thermal neutrons must be delivered and absorbed by the I to produce a lethal 1 n QVLi reaction Two major problems must be surmounted
