

The Digestive System

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, where nutrients are absorbed. The digestive system also includes accessory organs that help in the process, such as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, chyme moves into the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, where it is mixed with bile secreted by the liver and pancreatic juice secreted by the pancreas. This area is a mixing region on the intestine where the digestive system continues. The gallbladder stores bile secreted by the liver and releases it into the duodenum.

Layers of large intestine

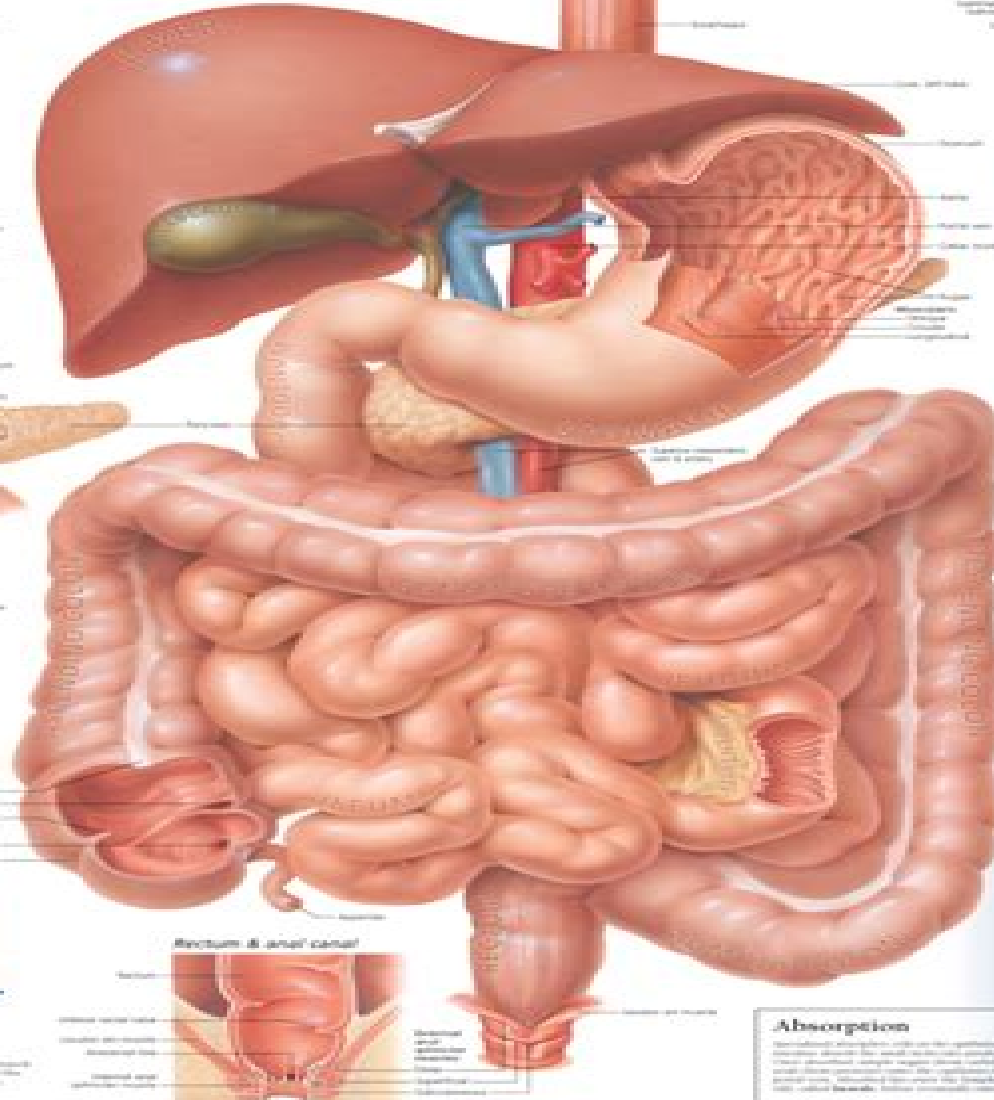

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the colon, and the rectum. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the undigested food, forming feces. The large intestine is divided into the cecum, ascending colon, transverse colon, descending colon, and sigmoid colon.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions move the material forward and the food is then, when the stomach has relaxed.

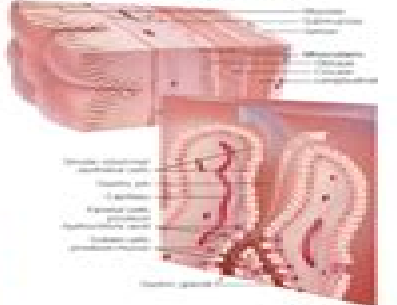

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing, the mechanical action of the food, begins in the mouth. The tongue mixes the food with the secretions of the salivary glands, which salivates. Saliva is rich in the enzyme amylase, which begins the breakdown of starches into simple sugars. Saliva also contains mucus, which lubricates the food for swallowing.

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for mixing and breaking down food into a semi-liquid state called chyme. It is located in the upper left part of the abdomen. The stomach wall is composed of several layers, including the mucosa, which contains gastric glands that secrete stomach acid.

Small intestine

The small intestine consists of three parts: the duodenum, jejunum, and ileum. It is responsible for the majority of the digestion and absorption of nutrients. The small intestine is highly coiled and has a large surface area for absorption.

Absorption

The process of absorption occurs in the small intestine. Nutrients are absorbed through the intestinal lining and enter the bloodstream. The large intestine is responsible for the absorption of water and electrolytes.
