

and refining his own skills, he was equally famous for the amount of time he spent studying and exposing the weaknesses of his opponents. Using failure in film enabled Jordan to systematically take advantage of almost any game day rotation, ultimately leading to him becoming the greatest all-around player of all time. His protégé, Kobe Bryant, followed Jordan's work ethic and use of failure in film as a template for his own success.

Finally, the idea of people being "gifted and talented" is nothing more than a social construct. It is often used as a means for tracking students into "gifted and talented" or "honors" classes within educational settings. In addition to manipulating the self-esteem of youths across the planet, the term and the tracking born out of it have literally exacerbated the segregation of America's classrooms. The good news is that talent is not innate; it is cultivated. People who call others "talented" or "gifted" do so because they observe others that are good at a certain skill or endeavor. Fortunately, that term is a misnomer. Most people are fully capable of learning and developing their abilities at a new skill. Mastery of a skill should not be confused with something someone is inherently born with. Viewing one's success through the lens of growth with a growth mindset allows one to progress without feeling inferior.

In contrast, there are those who feel that failure is the worst thing and that is why it is better to not try. They typically claim that they just aren't "talented" at the given task, so there is no point in them trying. Ironically, people's greatest limitations are often themselves. As long as one has a pulse and an openness to putting in time, intentional practice, and hard work, they usually have the ability to grow and develop in their desired endeavor. Most skills worth having don't come easy—we get what we work for. In summary, failure is far from the worst thing in the world because it allows us to focus on the process, acquiring skills, refining our shortcomings through intentional practice, and ignoring social constructs of success by cultivating a growth mindset. Albert Einstein once said, "Everybody is a genius. But if you judge a fish by its ability to climb a tree, it will live its whole life believing that it is stupid." We must lift up those around us through encouragement, sharing our knowledge, and allowing ourselves to be vulnerable so that everyone can see that we, too, were all beginners at something at one point. By helping other people we can give them hope to achieve their dreams.
