

The Digestive Process

The digestive system

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is essentially a muscular tube in which food is broken down by the action of enzymes and chemical substances. Food enters the mouth, is chewed, and is propelled through a series of different accessory and absorptive organs. Within these organs, food is digested (broken down) by digestive enzymes and components that change its form. The digestive system also stores undigested components until they are ready to be expelled at the end of the gastrointestinal tract.

Food is chewed and swallowed in about 1 minute.

Food moves through the stomach in 2 to 4 hours.

After leaving the stomach, chyme moves into the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, where it is mixed with bile produced by the liver and pancreatic juice produced by the pancreas. Enzymes help to break up the food.

Digestion & absorption

Elimination

Chewing & swallowing

Chewing, the mechanical action of the mouth and tongue, begins the breakdown of solid food. This greatly increases food's surface area and exposes the food to the action of the salivary glands. Saliva contains the food and begins the digestion of starch. The mixture of food and saliva is called a bolus. In the bolus, the pharynx, the esophagus, a flap-like valve, and the vocal cord contract, forcing the bolus forward, where it moves down through the esophagus to the stomach.

Peristaltic action

Material is moved through the digestive system by a series of muscle contractions called peristalsis. The muscle is relaxed in the material contents, while the muscle above it contracts, forcing the material into the next section.

In the esophagus, material moves through the large intestine, where it is absorbed and water is absorbed (dehydration). The remaining mass is moved forward and regular contractions.

Colonic movement

Movement through the large intestine is accomplished through the contractions of the longitudinal and circular muscles. Types of movement include peristaltic action, segmental action, and mass movement. Movement of food through the large intestine is slower than through the small intestine, allowing for reabsorption of water.

Types of movement

Segmentation action

In regular intervals, ring-like contractions (chase) and relax the water material, then the water is absorbed. This process is called segmentation.
