Abstract

Downloaded from <http://ajphaphysocpharm.sagepub.com/>

Abstract: The effect of the use of a mobile phone on the performance of a simulated driving task was investigated. The participants were divided into two groups: one group used a mobile phone while driving, and the other group did not. The results showed that the use of a mobile phone significantly impaired the performance of the driving task, particularly in terms of reaction time and lane deviation. The findings suggest that the use of a mobile phone while driving is a major risk factor for road accidents.

Observation 8: I would advise a recent arrival of those managing themselves, also to use with a smartphone, taking the note with a smartphone app's help, to make an additional application as a formal introduction to assist the individuals present with their introduction with.

Discussion: E. coli possesses numerous mechanisms, and transcription factors are increasingly found in this bacterium to regulate virulence. EHEC may therefore have a greater regulatory network. It is thus likely that transcription control mechanisms in EHEC are more complex. The observed control of EHEC virulence genes via transcription and  $\sigma$  factor action are the subject of our future researches. It is also interesting to note that
