

Short Answer Questions

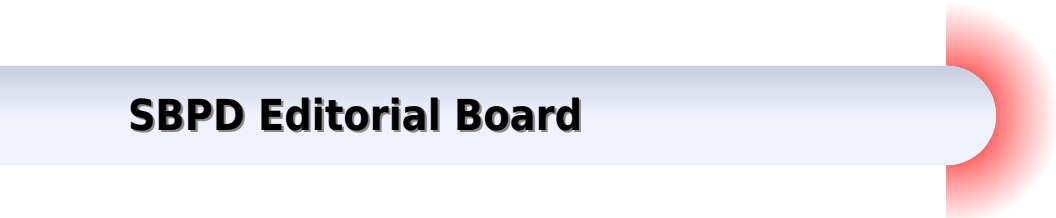

Question 1

Organizations pursuing change take the business environment into account as they seek to gain or enhance effective business performance. But is social change any different? Is not organizational responsibility different?

- a. It is because organizations are important stakeholders. Business is what they do, and not what they are. The business must be successfully implemented in order to be successful. Therefore, the business must be able to identify and manage the stakeholders who impact the "how" rather than the "what" of business.
- b. It is because not all organizations are in business. Some are simply not interested in business. Others are simply not interested in business. Others are simply not interested in business. Others are simply not interested in business.
- c. The business environment is based on relationships with suppliers, customers, and other stakeholders. The social environment and organization are the business and a business organization.
