

The Symbolism of the House in a Rose for Emily by Faulkner

✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

A Rose for Emily by William Faulkner vividly depicts the gradual decline of the Southern aristocracy in the Civil War aftermath. The author's intentions are achieved primarily through the extensive use of symbols within the story. In particular, the symbol of the house is of primary importance, since it stands for the demise of the Pre-Civil War epoch.

The author develops this symbolism through several clues, incorporated within the narrative for readers to discover. Indeed, extensive descriptions of the Griersons' mansion vividly represent the deterioration of their pre-Civil War well-being. For instance, Emily's house is filled with objects representing the past, such as her father's crayon portrait, "tarnished" items, and "cracked" furniture (Faulkner 51). The Negro butler at Emily's house is also perceived as a relic since the range of his tasks becomes limited to letting visitors in and out, and therefore his services are needless.

The author deliberately mentions the former splendor of the house, which "had once been white, decorated with cupolas and spires and scrolled balconies in the heavily lightsome style of the seventies..." (Faulkner 49). However, over time, the luxurious appearance of the house and its prestigious location come to nothing: "only Miss Emily's house was left, lifting its stubborn and coquettish decay above the cotton wagons and the gasoline pumps—an eyesore among eyesores" (Faulkner 49). In other words, Emily's old-fashioned house becomes opposed to the present-day industrial area around it. Hence, the author emphasizes the conflict between Emily and her community, which is a driving force of the story.

The author identifies the decaying symbolism of the house in the text through the author's constant mentions of dust, which fills the Griersons' mansion: "faint and invisible dust dry and acrid in the nostrils" (Faulkner 61). Stagnation is further emphasized by the use of adjectives "even," "patient," and "biding": "...beside him lay that even coating of the patient and biding dust" (Faulkner 61). In such a manner, the author highlights that the time stood still in the Griersons' mansion for years. Furthermore, dust defines a specific smell and atmosphere of the house in general: "...a
