

Transition Guide

Transition can be a time of fear for young people. Ensuring that young people have a positive transition can be a significant challenge and one that should be a priority for all schools. A successful transition ensures young people are happy, engaged and ready to learn. It reduces the number of behavioural and attendance issues which can be problematic for both the young person and the school.

Here are some suggestions to create a positive transition experience for all young children.

- Create a memory booklet of the young person's experiences in their old setting, in which the transition booklet can be placed. This can be used by the children's practitioners, or can be used as a comfort and keepsake for the child at home.
- Young people will be welcomed by school staff and will be able to go to any of the classrooms. This will ensure that the young person is not lost and can go to any of the classrooms. This will ensure that the young person is not lost and can go to any of the classrooms.
- Encourage transition visits from previous schools to the school and to the school. This will ensure that the young person is not lost and can go to any of the classrooms.
- Ask the staff to come and spend time getting to know the children at their old settings. The young people will then be able to go to any of the classrooms. This will ensure that the young person is not lost and can go to any of the classrooms.

Transition Guide

Transition of any kind can be difficult for young people. Ensuring that young people have a positive transition both through school and to different schools is key. A successful transition ensures young people are happy, engaged and ready to learn. It reduces the number of behavioural and attendance issues which can be problematic for both the young person and the school.

Here are some suggestions to create a positive transition experience for all young children.

- Create a memory booklet of the young person's experiences in their old setting or school. This memory booklet can be taken with them and used by the children's practitioners, or can be used as a comfort and keepsake for the child at home.
- Create a fun and interesting treasure hunt around the building so young people are able to find where all classrooms are located. Ask the children to find key locations such as the main office, dining hall, library, etc. and discuss strategies for getting lost and help any anxieties the children may have.
- Encourage transition visits from previous schools to the school and to the school. This will ensure that the young person is not lost and can go to any of the classrooms.
- Ask key staff to come and spend time getting to know the children at their old settings. The young people will then be able to go to any of the classrooms. This will ensure that the young person is not lost and can go to any of the classrooms.
