

The Digestive System

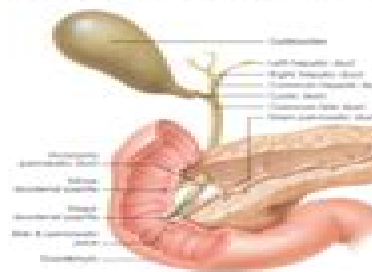

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, where nutrients are absorbed. The digestive system also includes accessory organs that help in the process, such as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

Just below the stomach, organs known as the accessories of the digestive system, which are connected to the stomach by the biliary and pancreatic ducts, assist in the digestive process. The liver is a large organ on the right side of the abdomen that produces bile, a substance that helps in the digestion of fats. The pancreas is a small organ located behind the stomach that produces pancreatic juice, a substance that helps in the digestion of carbohydrates, proteins, and fats.

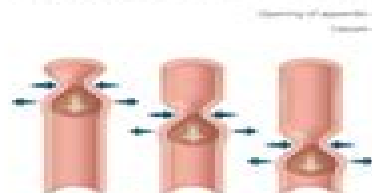

Layers of large intestine

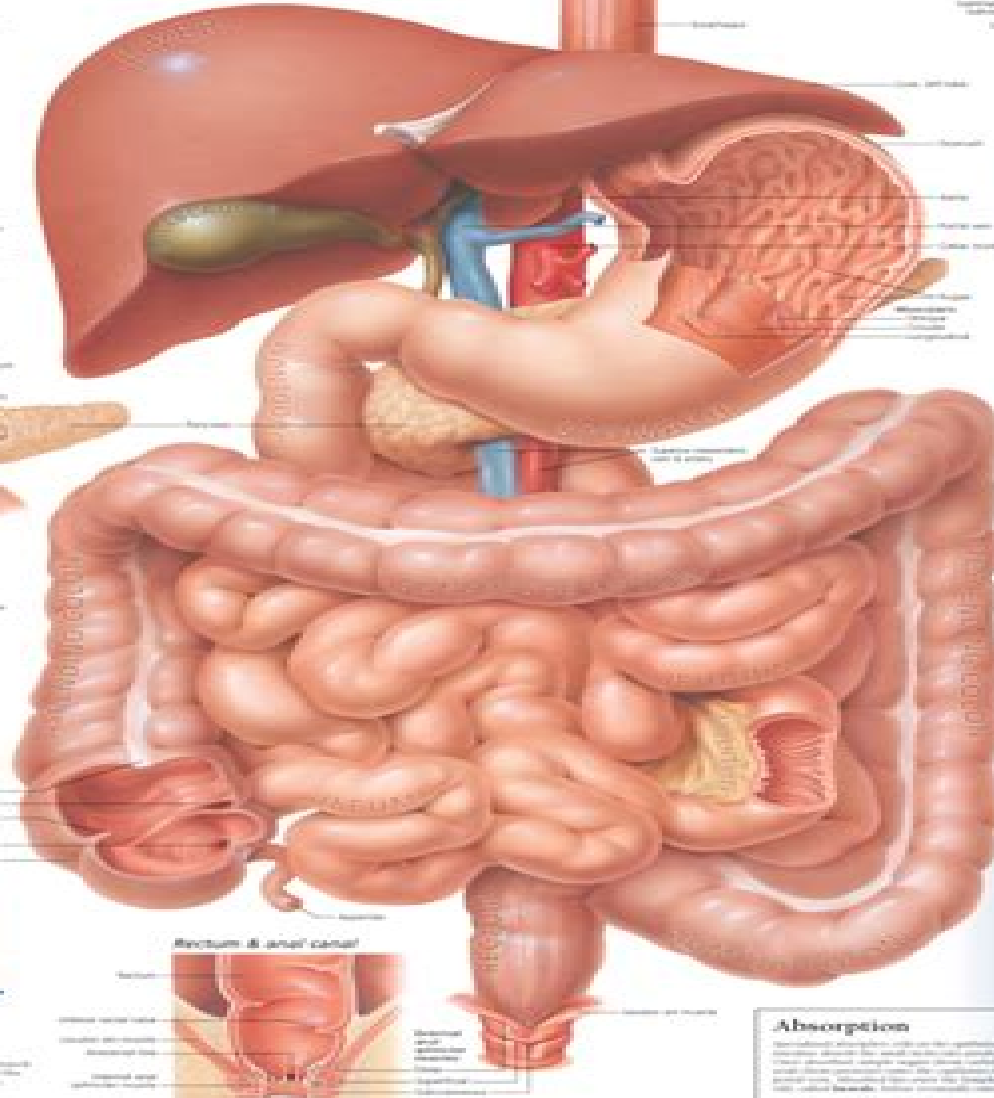

Large intestine

The large intestine, or colon, is the final part of the digestive system. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the remaining indigestible food matter. The large intestine is divided into the ascending colon, transverse colon, descending colon, and sigmoid colon.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful, rhythmic contractions called peristalsis. These contractions are initiated by the swallowing reflex and the defecation reflex, which are controlled by the brain.

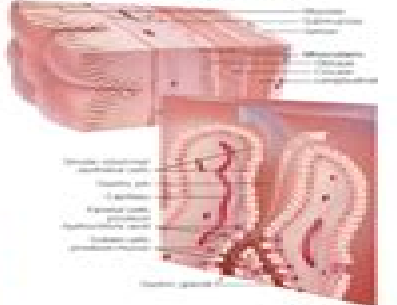

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing, the mechanical action of the food, is called mastication. It begins in the mouth, where food is broken down into small pieces by the teeth. The tongue then mixes the food with the secretions of the salivary glands, which salivates the food. Saliva is a watery substance that contains the enzyme amylase, which begins the chemical digestion of carbohydrates.

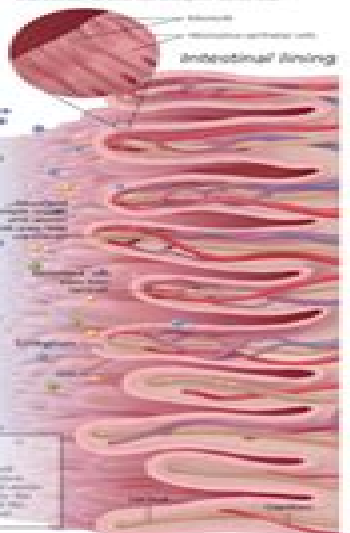

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for the chemical digestion of food. It is located in the upper left part of the abdomen. Food enters the stomach through the esophagus and is mixed with gastric juices, which contain the enzyme pepsin. The stomach wall is composed of several layers of muscle, which contract to mix the food and move it along the digestive tract.

Small intestine

The small intestine is a long, coiled tube that is responsible for the chemical digestion of food. It is located in the central part of the abdomen. Food enters the small intestine through the duodenum and is mixed with pancreatic juice and bile. The small intestine is divided into the duodenum, jejunum, and ileum.

Absorption

The absorption of nutrients occurs in the small intestine. The nutrients are absorbed through the intestinal lining and enter the bloodstream. The liver and pancreas also play a role in the absorption of nutrients.
