- 1. Chemical level - study of the chemical composition of the body.
- 2. Cellular level - study of the structure and function of cells.
- 3. Tissue level - study of the structure and function of tissues.
- 4. Organ level - study of the structure and function of organs.
- 5. System level - study of the structure and function of body systems.
- 6. Whole body level - study of the structure and function of the entire human body.

CELLS AND TISSUES

Cells are the basic units of structure and function of the human body.

Composition of cellular fluids

Cells are composed of various fluids, including intracellular fluid and extracellular fluid.

Intracellular fluid is the fluid inside the cell, and extracellular fluid is the fluid outside the cell.

Extracellular fluid is further divided into interstitial fluid and blood plasma.

Interstitial fluid is the fluid between cells, and blood plasma is the fluid in the blood.

Blood plasma is the liquid part of the blood, and it contains various proteins and electrolytes.

These fluids are essential for the proper functioning of the cell and the body.

The diagram illustrates the flow of fluids between the cell and its environment, showing the exchange of substances.

ORGANS

Organs are structures made up of different types of tissues that perform a specific function.

Organs are composed of different types of tissues, including epithelial, connective, muscle, and nervous tissue.

Each organ has a specific function, and they work together to maintain the body's homeostasis.

Organs are also affected by various factors, including age, diet, and environment.

Understanding the structure and function of organs is essential for understanding human anatomy and physiology.

Respiratory system

The respiratory system is responsible for the exchange of gases between the body and the environment.

It consists of the trachea, bronchi, and lungs.

The trachea is the windpipe, and the bronchi are the airways that lead to the lungs.

The lungs are the organs where the exchange of gases takes place.

During inhalation, air enters the lungs, and during exhalation, air leaves the lungs.

The respiratory system is essential for the survival of the body.

Digestive system

The digestive system is responsible for the breakdown of food into nutrients that the body can use.

It consists of the mouth, esophagus, stomach, and intestines.

The mouth is where food enters the body, and the esophagus is the tube that leads to the stomach.

The stomach is where food is broken down into smaller pieces, and the intestines are where nutrients are absorbed.

The digestive system is essential for the survival of the body.

SYSTEMS

Systems are groups of organs that work together to perform a specific function.

There are four main systems in the human body: the respiratory system, the digestive system, the circulatory system, and the nervous system.

Each system has a specific function, and they all work together to maintain the body's homeostasis.

Understanding the structure and function of these systems is essential for understanding human anatomy and physiology.

NERVOUS SYSTEM

Neurons

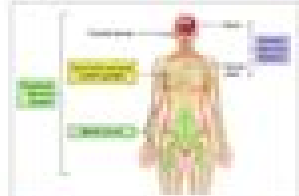

Neurons are the basic units of the nervous system, responsible for transmitting information.

They consist of a cell body, dendrites, and an axon.

Dendrites receive information from other neurons, and the axon transmits it to the next neuron.

The cell body contains the nucleus, which is the control center of the neuron.

Neurons are essential for the proper functioning of the nervous system.

Brain

The brain is the central control center of the nervous system.

It is responsible for processing information and controlling the body's functions.

The brain is divided into two halves, the left and right hemispheres.

Each hemisphere has different functions, and they work together to control the body.

Understanding the structure and function of the brain is essential for understanding human anatomy and physiology.

The axon is a long, thin projection that extends from the cell body.

It is covered by a myelin sheath, which helps to insulate the axon.

Understanding the structure and function of neurons is essential for understanding human anatomy and physiology.

Parts of the brain

The brain is composed of several parts, including the cerebrum, cerebellum, and brainstem.

The cerebrum is the largest part of the brain, and it is responsible for most of the body's functions.

The cerebellum is located at the back of the brain, and it is responsible for coordination and balance.

The brainstem is located at the base of the brain, and it is responsible for controlling basic life functions.

Understanding the structure and function of the brain is essential for understanding human anatomy and physiology.
