 Fur seals are small, furry seals that live in the waters around Antarctica. They have thick fur, which keeps them warm in freezing waters. Fur seals are swimmers and dive deep into the ocean fish, squid, and krill. They are seen on the shore, resting after a hunt. Fur seals live in large colonies and work together to protect their young. Fur seals are agile and can move quickly in the water and on land.	 The Snow Petrel is a small, all-white bird that lives in Antarctica. It is known for its white feathers, which help it blend into the snowy landscape. Snow Petrels have strong legs and can travel long distances across the icy waters of the South. They mostly eat fish, krill, and other small creatures. These birds make their nests on cliffs or icebergs, where they stay safe from predators. Snow Petrels are an important part of the Antarctic ecosystem.	 The Shearwater is a unique bird that lives in Antarctica. It is mostly white with dark wings and a long, pointed bill. Shearwaters are scavengers, which means they look for leftover food from other animals, like penguins and seals. They can often be seen near penguin colonies, where they find food scraps. Shearwaters also hunt for small insects and other creatures to eat. These birds are tough and can survive in the harsh conditions of the Antarctic environment.
